IF you were looking for real classy motion picture advertising you wouldn't want to stop about Chicago as a rule, for they don't go in for either big or artistic displays to any great extent since the ante of the Chicago papers is pretty large, so we are told. Therefore, this display on "The Hellion" used by the Bandbox theatre, and which was only one column by seven inches, may be taken as a fair sample of what the Windy City exhibitors do in this line.

this pretty commonplace for "Chi."

However, there is one other quite large-sized town where the displays used are as bad or worse, and that is—New York.

A request usually gets you more than a demand.

THE Isis Theatre of Denver is responsible for this small hand drawn display, two columns by eight inches, on "Katheleen Mavourneen," and has produced a very pretty piece of work. Using a scene cut, one which gives an idea of the historic detail with which the picture was produced, the display announces the star and title.

There isn't any real need of selling talk on this picture, since the story is as well known as a Mother Goose yarn, and it is the star and title which is being sold primarily. This is good work, one of the best of its kind which has come to our attention in some time.

There is never any doubt in a brilliant mind.

THE Boston Post, of the issue of November 23, ran this full-page layout on "Male and Female" as one of its illustrated pages. We don't know whether the theatre which played the attraction had to kick in or whether the Post thought the engagement of enough importance to make up the page gratis, but we do know that the result is about the highest type of publicity that a picture can have. If we owned a big city showshop, and felt we could afford a page of space for display purposes on pictures, this is exactly the way we would utilize that space, with perhaps the elimination of the synopsis of the story, frame the stills on the page the way it has been done here with a little caption and let the "pictures" sell the feature for us.

WHEN it comes to advertising Mary Pickford and her latest picture, "Heart o' the Hills," this display by the Rialto Theatre of Omaha bats 100 per cent. with us. The illustration of the star is really a work of art since this is not a photograph reproduced but an original pen drawing, or at least so we assume. Anyway, it is meritorious of all the praise that we have given it. The Rialto has given the star's name a pretty display, and the title is likewise rightly billed.

There are some people who might think that a little more extended line of selling talk could be used to advantage. We don't on a Pickford picture since the one big bet is the star herself. The Rialto might have added, however, that this is "Little Mary's" masterpiece which we really believe that it is.

In size the ad was three columns wide, and just a trifle short of a full page in depth.

Stay in the dark if you are light headed.

THERE is a lot of reading matter contained in this display on "Paid in Advance" and a good deal of it is just superlative, which probably never was read by most of the Conneaut (Ohio) News-Herald subscribers; but for all of that the La Grande has framed a display that will pass as much better than average. To the use of the producer's cut has been added the selling talk, none of which can be criticized unless it is the connection of repetition in thought. Quoting what happened at Cleveland theatres is probably a strong selling argument in Conneaut, as the city is not so far from Cleveland and therefore copies much from it in its opinions of amusements. One thing has been accomplished here which isn't often done so well, and that is to link up a producer's cut and reading matter set in type so that it isn't apparent where the cut left off and the type-set matter begins. In size this was four columns by thirteen inches.

itself is concerned. Therefore, the fact that the Regent Theatre of Elmira, N. Y., has managed to evolve this page tie-up on "The Country Cousin" which doesn't look "hodge podge" invites special praise from this department. Of course the Regent had a rather appropriate picture for its Thanksgiving bill and one which tied up extra well with the co-operative advertising idea. Just whether Manager George Tooker of the Regent is responsible for the framing of this display or not we haven't been informed. If he is then our congratulations go double. It is something to be a good showman and a good artist all in the same piece. This display was used in the Elmira Herald of November 21st.

There can be no question but that the Stillman has advertised this feature along the right lines. It has used two very good cuts of Miss Binney, one in character and one as an ingenue, told about her success in "39 East," mentioned that this is Mrs. Fiske's play and Helen R. Martin's novel and framed it all within a nice decorative border. The writer happened to write the review and plan book for this picture and what the Stillman has done here is exactly what was recommended there.

Increasing Your Seating Capacity

By Harold B. Franklin

Managing Director, Shea's Hippodrome

IT is possible to increase the capacity of your house without making any alterations! All that is necessary is to get your patrons to come when your feature begins, instead of having them walk in during the second, third or fourth reel. Not only will this give you more room for your second and third show, but will give considerably more satisfaction to your patrons, because they will enjoy the feature more thoroughly and will be enabled to follow the continuity of the story. Who would think of picking up a book and starting in at the fifteenth chapter or watching a play backwards, yet this is what is being done in the majority of motion picture theatres.

It will be argued that it is no easy matter to make your patrons come at a definite time. That may be so. Some of your patrons are likely to come at any time, regardless of any effort you may make. These you cannot control. But there are many who can be influenced to come at a certain hour. Therefore, at least half of the issue is in your hands.

In order to accomplish what we are after, it is necessary to arrange the program schedule as uniform as possible for every presentation, providing, of course, that the character of the feature, comedy, etc., will allow this. It may at times be more advantageous to rearrange the running order of a show in order to have it blend properly. But with few exceptions most programs run a certain time. When the feature is unusually long, one or two of the shorter subjects can be eliminated without hurting the entertainment value of the program. By having your show run a certain length you can put on the principal feature at a stated time each day, say for example, at 12, 2, 4, 6, 8 and 10 o'clock. By constant concentration in all advertising and displays on the fact that the feature begins at the stated intervals you will convert a surprisingly large percentage of your patrons.

The following mediums are at your disposal for spreading your message:

Program schedule in front of theatre.

Slides and trailers with stated time.

Newspaper ads.

Time schedules, placed at important points throughout the house.

It will be but a short time before your patrons will realize that for a true enjoyment of the program they should come at the beginning of the feature.

At Shea's Hippodrome we have found the time schedule form to be of great advantage. These forms are furnished to the head usher on each floor and one placed in a frame at each doorkeeper's station. They are also hung in the rest rooms. In this way employes are made familiar with every part of the performance and can answer questions intelligently. A program time schedule is a permanent part of the frame display.

We also feel that it is important to give prompt, courteous, telephone service and an operator is kept on duty from 9 a. m. until 11 p. m., who can give patrons almost any information desired.

Anyone will agree that it is a decided advantage to see a picture from the beginning to the end, and not backwards. You have an easy problem to solve. It merely requires the willingness on the part of the exhibitor to plan an intelligent campaign to educate patrons just when to come in order to enjoy the full measure of his entertainment

New, Novel and Effective

MANAGER Charles C. Perry of the Minneapolis Strand, recently created considerable comment on his double-bill, Charles Ray in "The Egg-Crate Wallop" and "Uncle Tom Without the Cabin" by using some novel advertising schemes.

On the Monday after the film's opening the Minneapolis Boxing Club staged a prize-fight for the benefit of visiting American Legionaires. Manager Perry and his advertising director, J. L. Johnston, issued a special herald which called attention to the boxing bout in "The Egg-Crate Wallop" and backed this up with a program of future attractions under the captions "Main Events and Lively Preliminaries." These heralds were laid on each seat at the fight and handed out to fight fans as they left the scene of the bout. To follow this up, Mr. Perry conceived the idea of a street parade and each noon during the showing of the dual-feature a "big free street parade" made up of five people and a bull-dog, wended its way up the leading thoroughfares much to the hilarity of thousands who lined the line of march. The parade was led by a stocky negro playing a baritone horn and bearing a sign "The Band." Second came a boy with a cake of ice bearing the wording "The ice that Eliza crossed," then came another youngster pulling a wagon in which rode Little Eva attired in silken hoop skirts and fluffy pantalettes and keeping the light from her eyes with a miniature parasol. Next followed Simon Legree, with walrus like moustache and a blacksnake whip. By his side trotted a small bull terrier bearing a sign "Bloodhounds" and tied to Little Eva's vehicle with a rope almost as large as the dog himself. At the end of the parade a boy carried a placard calling attention to the showing of "Uncle Tom Without the Cabin" at the Strand. The box office proved Mr. Perry's idea to be a decided asset to his week's business.

Two Musicians and Brains—Result a High Class Vaudeville Act

MILWAUKEE promises to be famous for something besides that which it was famous for before the "thirsty-first" of July if Manager George Fischer, the enterprising manager of the above named city, keeps on with his clever exploitation stunts, at his Alhambra theatre.

To be epigramic and quote our Milwaukee correspondent we state that it is possible to take two musicians from your orchestra, use a little ingenuity and the result is a thousand-dollar vaudeville act.

That is the recipe used recently by Manager George Fischer in presenting a novelty number as part of the program at the Alhambra. Manager Fischer had the director of his orchestra, George Lipschultz, and the pianist, William Lindner, play a few selections as a special offering. He dressed the two musicians in white and used an ivory baby grand piano. Mr. Fischer then secured the use of a massive gilt frame from a local art museum, the frame having been specially constructed for a huge oil painting. This was set in front of the piano and surrounded by black cloth hangings. Border lights were placed inside the frame, the entire effect being most pleasing to the eye. In addition to this the operators in the projection booth constructed colored slides, which were so blocked out that they illuminated just the gilt frame around the small stage. As the dim lights were gradually brought up the two players stood perfectly still, the entire effect being that of a huge picture. The act was such a novelty and made such a hit with the Alhambra audiences, that it will be repeated at an early date.

According to Manager Fischer the idea is but another example of how ordinary olios may, by a little thought, be made into high class acts.

Exhibitors Help Each Other With Telegram Display

OUT in Wisconsin, two wide-awake showmen, E. C. Bostwick of Milwaukee, and R. K. Mosiman of Oshkosh, have originated a novel and profitable idea of motion picture exploitation.

By displaying in the lobby, an enthusiastic telegram from Milwaukee to Oshkosh exhibitor, in conjunction with other publicity stunts for Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables," a large patronage was drawn to Mr. Mosiman's theatre.

Mr. Bostwick telegraphed to Oshkosh, stating all that he had found true of the merit and charm of "Anne of Green Gables" and of the appeal which Mary Miles Minter had for Milwaukee audiences during the showing of the picture there.

Mr. Mosiman showed a keen sense of advertising value by placing the original telegram in an attractive frame in his lobby. In large letters at the top were the words: "Read this!" Mr. Mosiman declares such is the curiosity of the average citizen that nine out of ten stopped to read, and that the use of the telegram display as a lobby decoration is effective and arresting to the eye.

He further suggests that this idea has boundless possibilities for exhibitors all over the country who have contracted for similar pictures. The value of a commendatory message from an exhibitor in a large city to the patrons of a theatre in a smaller town are tremendous in the opinion of Mr. Mosiman, and in many cases this mutual aid can be easily arranged.

In addition to this unusual form of picture publicity, Mr. Mosiman attributes his success with "Anne of Green Gables" to an extensive tie-up with the public schools of Oshkosh, and with the Y. W. C. A.

Dignified letters were sent to the principals of every educational institution in Oshkosh, in which attention was called to the photoplay. Because this picture is adapted from the classic American story by L. M. Montgomery, and is well known to educators throughout the country, an appeal was made as to its literary value and the benefits of arranging school parties for special viewings of the picture.

The local Y. W. C. A. was approached for its opinion of the photoplay and a large patronage resulted from the boosting of the film received at the hands of this organization.

The most unique corp of "sandwich men" who ever advertised a picture. These boys worked for the "Sunshine Club" and the Liberty theatre, Fresno, Cal.

New Style "Sandwich Men" Work for Manager Sharp

EXHIBITORS who are looking for a "Sunshine Week" can herein find the receipt, tried, proven practicable and feasible and highly profitable by George F. Sharp, manager of the Liberty theatre, Fresno, Cal.

This sunshine-special is highly recommended to exhibitors who have a strong special feature in opposition to combat against. This was the predicament Mr. Sharp experienced. Thanks to the publicity department of a rival theatre he was informed a month in advance that during a certain week, not far distant, he was going to have the hardest competition in the history of the Liberty theatre. According to the plans of this rival exhibitor Mr. Sharp's house would be lucky to even get receipts enough to pay the operator's salary.

Thus it was that a recent week in Fresno was designated as "Sunshine Week," so-called because the Liberty Theatre was launching a drive for sunshine and the "Sunnyside Club" of Fresno was all keyed up, eager to make the week the biggest thing in Fresno history. And the campaign was opened with a most auspicious announcement stating that the brightest star in filmland was going to shed the sunshine's glow—Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum,"

The "Sunnyside Club," be it said, was a semi-charitable organization, whose greatest mission was to bring cheer into the hearts of poor children. This Club, like all good clubs and many good people, needed money. So what could be sweeter than arranging some sort of a benefit or percentage of the net receipts to be paid this organization. And in return for a part of the net profits, the club agreed to enlist the aid of all newsboys in Fresno It was decided to have each of the newspaper carriers wear a neat and attractive sign on his back advertising the showing of "The Hoodlum" at the Liberty theatre.

A novel feature of this arrangement was the method devised by Mr. Sharp to prevent the boys from smearing their signs and collecting debris with them. Prizes were offered the boys who could keep the signs cleanest. The posters were returned to the theatre surprisingly fresh and the only casualties reported were the outcome of grudge fights.

Publicity regarding Sunshine week was lavishly administered. Fresno was not lacking in newspapers that are glad to boost a worthy cause and during the campaign there was an article on the front page of each daily newspaper calling public attention to the worthy cause of spreading Sunshine.

Despite the amount of free publicity, Sharp was not content to be found wanting in the advertising columns. Although he had an opportunity of sitting back and watching a successful campaign being launched, he realized that the maximum of results could not be obtained without a combined effort for appealing exploitation matter about the pictures and informative matter about the sunshine drive, so he bought liberal newspaper space and attended to all the more ordinary matters pertaining to good exploitation.

"The best things about 'Sunshine Week,'" said Mr. Sharp, "is that it brought a lot of sunshine into the lives of the poor of Fresno. Also it made the biggest profit in the history of my house, although we had the strongest opposition imaginable to compete against."

Real Co-operation Between Newspaper and Exhibitor

WHEN it comes to getting in the limelight for free publicity, the grand prize should go to A. Horwitz, manager of the Colonial theatre, Toledo, Ohio. Not that Mr. Horwitz was following Kid McCoy's advice for himself, but rather for the benefit of the Colonial and its attraction, "The Perfect Model," which has as star Audrey Munson, the Cleveland artists' model.

Miss Munson was the medium through which Mr. Horwitz worked. When he played the Munson feature, the star was induced to come to Toledo for a personal appearance engagement and the Toledo Blade was interested in her visit to the extent of ostensibly being official host.

"The Blade arranged with Miss Munson to give its women readers," we quote from a copy of the paper, "daily instructions at her suite in the Secor hotel", and filled its columns about the lady, what she did, where she did it and how she came to do it, for the whole week. Miss Munson gave health talks and athletic advice and beauty hints and a lot of other hints and the Blade and the Colonial and the feature picture, "The Perfect Model," came in for some advertising in every interview. It was a clean up in every way for film, the newspaper, and the Colonial. No better example of what may be accomplished in the way of co-operation between newspaper and exhibitor has ever been reported. It is a fine opportunity to prove that the movie page is a valuable asset to both publisher and showman. If you want to convince your editors that other newspapers are giving the photoplay free space because it is good reading, write for copies of the Blade covering this campaign.

Victoria of Baltimore Installs New Screen Set

An Italian garden the back of which is a mess of luxurious foliage through which a crescent moon appears to throw the half-light of evening is the design of a new screen set which has just been installed at Nixon's Victoria theatre, Baltimore. The screen is suspended into the midst of the garden. A soft light near the footlights outlines the marble balustrade of a staircase which leads into a sunken garden in which is an electrically lighted aquarium of live fish.

In suspending the screen in this manner, Harry McComas, who designed the set, has made use of a method that has never before been utilized. The set is built along the lines of that of the Rialto theatre in New York of which Mr. McComas was for several years, stage director.

Lacy Cashes in on Woman's Superstitions

HERE is the story of a man who makes extra money because he knows that one of woman's prerogatives, along with the one to change her mind, is the tendency to be superstitious. Pretty nearly every woman is like Ethel Barrymore in "Declassé," "Never would believe her doctor or lawyer but always had faith in a fortune teller." This wise man to whom we refer is Will Lacy, manager of the Star theatre, Portland, Oregon, who, when playing "The Thirteenth Chair," decided that an opportunity was presented to get a lot of women out by engaging a clairvoyant for a special matinee showing to which only the gentler sex were to be admitted. Just what happened inside the theatre at this special performance is not known by the writer, but what happened outside may be judged by the accompanying illustration. Apparently a lot of late dinners were staged in Portland on the day of the matinee, since the females shown in the cut were only those who could not get in to the show, and were waiting for the next performance. Don't forget this stunt if you haven't played "The Thirteenth Chair." It is an especially good idea since clairvoyance enters largely into the plot of the picture.

In the lobby display illustration, you will note the sign which reads "Extra attraction, Ask Cunning, he is the man who knows." We can not resist the temptation to add that this seems an excellent name for a clairvoyant.

For the regular three days engagement of "The Thirteenth Chair," Manager Lacy relied on good newspaper advertising and his attractive lobby display to attract business. The tasty arrangement of the display will be noted in the photograph at the right. The "incandescent spot," placed just back of the center board of "stills," was used to throw a colored light on a figure of the clairvoyant as shown in the producer's three sheet on the feature.

Frank Lacey of the Star, Portland, is a judge of human nature. Witness what his special matinee on "The 13th Chair" idea did for him

Here Is a Stunt that Will Make Your Grocer Smile

JOE MAITLAND, proprietor of the Palace Theatre at Mandan, N. D., has just put over a "tieup" advertising campaign in behalf of a picture which ranks him as an exploitation leader in the Northwest and places the ingenuity of the small town exhibitor on a par with the best big town showmen in the business.

Mr. Maitland had booked Mary Pickford's "The Hoodlum" for a two days' run. For a week in advance of its presentation he had every housewife in town talking about it.

Tieup advertising campaigns are nothing new in this territory, but, in deciding to employ this well-tried and most effective medium of cooperative publicity, the Manden exhibitor came to the conclusion that to get a maximum of results he must inject something "decidedly different" into his plan of action.

So he bought 5,000 brown paper bags such as are used by grocers for the distribution of groceries to their customers. On one side of each of these bags he had printed in red letters the announcement that "The Hoodlum" had been booked for a run at the Palace.

He then gave 1,000 bags to each of five grocery store proprietors, who were more than glad to receive this donation, for it not only provided them with free containers for articles purchased by customers but advertised their business as well as the picture.

"A play that set Twin City fans talking," read the advertisement on one of the bags. "Our own Mary Pickford in the second picture from her own studio, 'The Hoodlum,' which is little Mary's greatest achievement. Palace two nights, Wednesday, Thursday, November 5 and 6—Special matinee Wednesday, 4 p. m."

And at the bottom of this announcement was the statement, "Buy your groceries at O'Rourke's Grocery Store." In the cases of each of the four other grocers, their names were substituted in place of "O'Rourke's."

Inasmuch as Mr. Maitland obtained the cooperation of the five leading grocery stores, practically every home in town that bought its food in Mandan (and it is claimed that all of them do), received these brown grocery bags with the intelligence concerning the coming attraction.

Husbands who stopped in at the grocery at the end of a day's work to get a pound of butter or a dozen eggs smiled when they read the novel advertisement that enclosed their purchases. Housewives remarked about it. The psychology of the whole stunt made itself felt in a most substantial way. It reached out of town to the farmers who came in to make their necessary purchases of supplies for the winter.

And when the picture showed the whole town and countryside turned out to enjoy it, according to Mr. Maitland.

Welcome banner on State Street, Chicago, preceding the opening of Elsie Janis in "A Regular Girl"

Windy City Exploitation For "A Regular Girl" Merits Praise

THE Chicago exploitation for "A Regular Girl" has attracted widespread attention in the Windy City.

To begin the two weeks' campaign, permission was secured from the city, to string a huge banner across State Street at one of the busiest loop corners, welcoming the Second Division Association, which held its convention in the City on November 11th, 12th and 13th—and incidentally including in the welcome, Elsie Janis, a Regular Girl. Permission was granted and the banner was thrown across the street.

Then began a campaign for windows in the loop and the co-operation of a goodly number of business houses was secured, among them prominent State Street jewelry stores who have made a practice of placing silver frames in their windows, containing the photograph of some prominent actress, were pleased to have the opportunity of presenting Elsie Janis in this form.

Window display for "A Regular Girl," Chicago.

One of the novel window tie-ups secured was that of a circuit of seven windows controlled by Doctor B. F. Schulte, a prominent Chicago optician. Dr. Schulte each week, causes to be placed in these windows a large oil painting of some prominent character, bedecked with suitable spectacles. Dr. Schulte readily agreed that it would be a logical move to place Miss Janis' picture in all of these windows, which was done.

Woolworth's store was next. "A REGULAR GIRL" is the name of a sheet of music, published by Watterson, Berlin and Snyder. It was with little difficulty that Woolworth's was sold on the idea of featuring this song in their windows for a week of the picture's run. A big window, just off State Street, at Monroe, in the shadow of the big "Welcome" banner, was the window selected.

It was discovered that Elsie Janis was responsible for a "best seller," the same being a book containing accounts of her overseas adventures. Inquiry uncovered the fact that the book was on sale at A. C. McClurg's, Chicago's biggest book store. Consequently, they were informed that Elsie's picture would soon be in the city, and that a window containing a display of the book might result in better than the ordinary business, and a set of stills and a window trim and a mounted poster of Miss Janis was placed at the store's disposal.

In order to give the picture a royal send off, the co-operation of the Marines in Chicago was secured. Their huge truck bearing banners on the side with the legend, "ELSIE JANIS, A REGULAR GIRL, SAYS 'JOIN THE MARINES,' A REGULAR OUTFIT," bore down on the loop on Monday, November 24th.

The day the picture opened, 500 toy balloons were let loose from the top of the Consumer's building, one of the tallest of the loop buildings. Each balloon bore a tag entitling the bearer to an autographed picture of Miss Janis. The "balloon ascension" blocked traffic and caused police interference but not before most of the balloons were on their way skyward and had floated off over the city.

Many of the tags were returned for the photographs offered as a reward.

Holds Contest for Ince Stars

THE appearances of Douglas MacLean and Doris May, Thomas H. Ince's new co-stars, "Twenty-three and a Half Hours Leave," at the Olympia theatre, New Haven, was the occasion for Manager Spragg's holding a novel contest which developed keen interest among his patrons and increased his attendance by hundreds.

By means of special slides run before and during the engagement of the picture at the Olympia, the public was informed that the management offered prizes for the best opinions, written in two hundred words or less, as to the young co-stars becoming the most popular discoveries of the year. The judges were Col. N. G. Osborne, of the Journal-Courier, and Col. Charles W. Pickett of the Times-Leader. Literary ability of surprising quality and quantity was evidenced.

The winner of the first prize was a young lady. More than twenty-five essays were really considered for first money, and it was with some difficulty that a decision was finally reached.

All the persons who submitted stories were given mention in the publicity attendant on the contest and were also rewarded for their efforts in various ways. In this way the chance of having disgruntled persons always to be considered in running a contest was avoided.

Proving It Pays to Play the Big Ones

THE theory that it doesn't matter what production the big Broadway picture theatres in New York play, or that they are bound to do about as much business regardless of the attraction, or the amount of exploitation and a lot of similar ideas have gone overboard completely in the engagement of "Male and Female" the Cecil B. De Mille production adapted from the Barrie stage play, "The Admirable Crichton" at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres during the last two weeks.

New York did not have the honor of a premier presentation, which, by the way, is getting to be rather an exception, and the film came into town with advance notices of success both as box office and entertainment success from such cities as Boston, San Francisco and Chicago, which while probably not of any great box office value to the Rivoli theatre, where the picture opened before moving to the Rialto for the second week's engagement, did serve to emphasize to those who had its New York presentation in charge that they should go the limit with their exploitation, sure that their appropriation for advertising would be covered in the business the film would do.

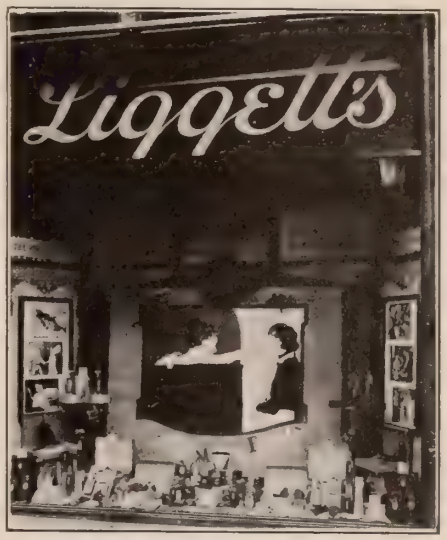
So it was that "Male and Female" opened after an exploitation campaign which is seldom seen in this city, for any attraction, let alone a motion picture.

The Metropolis is long on the use of lithograph stands and is used to seeing a picture advertised extensively by this method but the number of twenty-four sheets that we used for "Male and Female" surpassed anything yet attempted on a single production. Some six thousand lithographs, ranging from 24 sheets down to the modest one sheet, placarded all of Greater New York until everyone who stirs outside his own home must have been informed of the coming of the opening attraction.

View of the crowds which clamored to get into "Male and Female," at the Rivoli, New York

Striking displays were arranged in the windows of four of the leading drug stores in the Forty-second street district. The center of each of these displays consisted of an original poster, in vivid colors and sixty inches square, done by C. E. Millard, poster artist of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres. The posters show Gloria Swanson, in the role of Lady Mary Lasenby, in the bath scene, which is one of the striking scenes of the picture, and they are being used in connection with the display of perfumes and toilet articles. The stores carrying these displays were Liggett's at 50 East Forty-second street, 509 Fifth avenue and Hotel Commodore, and Hetherington's, Forty-second street and Vanderbilt avenue.

Other evidences of ingenious exploitation ideas advanced were to be found in the windows of numerous piano stores in various parts of the city. The feature of these windows was a life-size cutout of one of the three-sheet posters showing



Gloria Swanson endeavoring to climb upon a piano, the illustration being taken from the scene in which Lady Mary is struggling in the surging waters in the cabin of the yacht which has been wrecked on the rocks of a South Pacific Island. The cut-out is mounted on compo board.

Through a tie-up arranged with the United Cigar Stores Company, there appeared early in the week in the windows of all the United stores in Greater New York colored posters showing Theodore Roberts smoking a cigar.

The poster is 12 by 28 inches, and besides advertising a Ricoro cigar it carries the announcement that Mr. Roberts is appearing in "Male and Female," together with the dates of the showing at the Rivoli and Rialto. These posters are being shown for three days in each of the United stores throughout the country, numbering nearly 3,000, and tie up directly with the theatres showing the picture wherever the dates are concurrent.

Brown of Harvard Has Nothing on Brown of Memphis

MAKING the industrial unrest, the H. C. L., the league of nations and other kindred national and international problems take a back seat, while the pretty girls use up perfectly good space on the front page, the back page and all intervening pages of a leading afternoon daily, is the latest of indoor sports in Memphis, Tenn.

Rather it was, for the city-wide beauty contest which has just closed in that thriving metropolis of the South, made local and national news fade into insignificance for three weeks while it was being decided who was the prettiest girl in the city.

As a free space getter, this publicity campaign put over by the Memphis Enterprises, Inc., of which C. A. McElravy is general manager and G. E. Brown, publicity director, tops anything that section of the South has ever seen.

Beginning with a top, front page double column opening story, begun one week in advance of the first showing of Marguerite Clark's "Luck in Pawn," which the contest was to exploit, the publicity spreads ran all the way up to eight columns, three quarters of a page in depth.

And outside of the cost of the photographic layouts, the campaign cost the Memphis Enterprises, Inc., absolutely nothing.

The contest ran for nearly three weeks and wound up with the publication on the front page of the photograph of Miss Elizabeth Davidson, who was declared to be the prettiest girl in Memphis. Along with the photo were a story and a poem written by two feature writers of the paper.

The winner was chosen from among more than 250 of the prettiest girls in Memphis, which, by the way, is noted for its beautiful women.

To avoid any possible local influences or petty jealousies, it was decided to have a committee of three prominent business men select the prettiest 12 in the city and then to have Marguerite Clark act as final judge. Accordingly her decision was wired back to Memphis after photographs of the 12 prettiest had been sent her.

The prize offered was a sterling silver loving cup which was donated by the leading jeweler of the city and displayed for three weeks in his window. The photographs of all contestants were taken free of charge by a prominent photographer where the contestant did not already have a good photograph; the columns of The News Scimitar, the biggest afternoon daily were opened to Mr. Brown, who wrote all the publicity material and directed the contest.

Before the contest was half over, the entire city was talking pretty girls. Photographs poured in, layouts of the prettiest girls were run and everybody was betting on his choice of the girls. The publication of the three quarters page spread of the winning 12 girls was the biggest thing ever done and the results at the box office of the Strand theatre after the week's run brought the smile that won't come off to the face of the management.

And Miss Davidson was fittingly crowned queen of the beauties when the trophy was presented to her and the 11 other girls say they are having the times of their young lives.

Good Luck and Good Management Win for Craver

MAKING his lobby look like a Hudson Bay Company, who by the way have entered the motion picture industry, trading post, was one of the stunts that helped Manager R. D. Craver of the Broadway theatre of Charlotte, North Carolina, to put "Back to God's County" over.

Craver is alleged to have been fortunate enough to secure his Northland trappings, a rather scarce article in North Carolina we imagine, from a disgruntled manager of a side show which had been playing the County fair at Charlotte. The "props" for the fair attraction were just what the enterprising showman wanted for providing atmosphere for the Nell Shipman picture, with its story of animals and primeval life in the far North and he was not long in driving a bargain with the side show manager. What he purchased may be judged from the accompanying photograph taken of the lobby during the run of the film. Incidentally a fair idea of whether or not the stunt paid may be judged from the crowd, many no doubt waiting their turn to get in to see the picture, since it is to be assumed that no one waits outside a show shop just for the mere privilege of having its picture "took." Some idea of the drawing power of "Back to God's Country" among the male sex may also be gained from an inspection of the illustration and the noting of the fact that most of those waiting to get in to see the feature are men. Seldom it is that men will wait at all to get into a picture house. Prove this by looking over the photographs of waiting crowds about the lobby.

Even the Sheep Have Entered the Show Game

IF the Philadelphia public did not become acquainted with Mabel Normand in her latest Goldwyn success "Jinx," it was not the fault of the resourceful publicity staff co-operating with the management of the Chestnut Street Opera House. It happened that the Shuberts' "Monte Cristo, Jr." company was playing in the city at the time of the engagement of "Jinx," and three of the most striking girls in the company were enlisted as boosters for the picture.

After the assistance of the show girls had been assured, a visit was paid to a local meat packing concern that donated three lambs to the cause of exploitation. These lambs, attired in blankets, ribbons, and collars were led down Broad Street to Chestnut and then along the staid old thoroughfare to the theatre, the three Monte Cristo beauties, directing the line of march. Needless to say the name "Jinx" appeared in conspicuous lettering on the blankets worn by the lambs.

At the busiest period of Philadelphia's shopping hours, the procession attracted so much interest that it held up traffic at the most crowded centers of the commercial district. A news weekly cameraman who had been tipped off to what was going to happen, was on hand to film the event, which also was reported as a news story in the Philadelphia papers.

Another advertising stunt in Philadelphia was arranged in co-operation with the Mercer Automobile Co., which is displaying in its show window neatly framed pictures of Pauline Frederick in her Mercer speedster. Accompanying the picture is a gilt card inscribed "Pauline Frederick, Goldwyn Star." John Bowers in his Hudson car, also smiles on pedestrians from the show window of the Hudson offices in Philadelphia.

"Blossoms" Plays Day and Date in Cincinnati at Two Downtown Houses

MANY are the tales of good showmanship that follows the engagements of "Broken Blossoms" throughout the country. Among the managers who recognized the exploitation possibilities the feature possesses, is Raymond Frankel, manager of the Alhambra and Lubin theatres of Cincinnati, who booked the feature at both houses and then went after his advertising to insure enough business for the day and date showings.

The exploitation campaign was opened well in advance of the first day of the showing and included the liberal use of lithographs in the form of stickers and teasers and specially prepared newspaper publicity.

Working with the Cincinnati Post, Mr. Frankel, a few days previous to the opening, had the paper print the story of "Broken Blossoms" as one of the ten-minute novels which it runs daily. During the week of the showing specially prepared ads, which were the last word in artisticness, were carried in all of the newspapers. The lobbies of the two theatres were transformed into Chinese gardens, with blossoms as the chief feature of the decorations. The ticket sellers were garbed in Chinese costumes, and the ticket offices built up in the shape of Chinese pagodas. In the interior the oriental effect was carried out by the liberal use of Chinese lanterns and large baskets of poppies, while real Chinamen, who wore their own costumes, were hired as ushers. A special D. W. Griffith orchestra in each of the theatres carried out the musical program.

As a result of the big publicity and unusual lobby displays, large crowds were turned away at each performance, and in order to satisfy the popular demand the picture was held over for another week at the Alhambra theatre.

One of the exploitation ideas of Manager Sanderlin which kept "Blind Husbands" a drawing card for two weeks at the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, Stages Its First Prologue

AMONG the houses which have recently gone in for the prologue and stage setting as a part of picture presentation is the Des Monies theatre, the new A. H. Blank house recently opened at Des Moines, Iowa, which Arthur G. Stolte, old friend of the NEWS and member of our Advisory Board, is managing. Mr. Stolte choose "Broken Blossoms" as the first feature on which to inaugurate his prologue policy. He prepared a very elaborate setting for the event and evolved some combinations of stage craft which will prove interesting to both those who do and who do not use the prologue as a part of their presentation.

On the right of the screen a set piece of a house was placed and on the left a Chinese Temple set. Both sets were semi-transparent. With the house dark the curtains were parted to show the set. Gradually the stage was lighted from back of the transparent set showing the "Chink" holding the girl as in the scene of the film near its close. The scene back of the transparent drop was reproduced with all the magnificance of the film depiction, silks and satins, the Chinese gown the "Chink" placed on the girl, and the flowers all being in evidence to carry the atmosphere of the picture. Insense was burned and the Chinese strains of music faintly heard. After bringing the prologue scene on the right side of the stage into full view and allowing it to fade again into darkness, the prologue number was continued in the temple set. The first to be seen on this side was the eyes of the Budha. Then the form of the "Chink" was seen before the Budha lighting the fires and striking the gong. This was simultaneous with the screening of the first title of the feature. The entire prologue took eight minutes for enactment and great attention to detail was given the production. Three actors were used in staging it. The exact sets used in the Griffith picture were used as a model for the prologue offering, the artist using scene stills as his copy. The entire theatre was decorated in red and green with red Chinese lanterns strung about the auditorium. The ushers were attired in Chinese costumes. The lobby was decorated in red and green and hung with lanterns. On each side of the lobby were two large paintings, sixteen feet long, of Chinese design. Incense was kept burning in the lobby and other decorations in the atmosphere of the picture added to the attractiveness of the display. Besides being the first prologue attempted by the Des Moines theatre, it was also the first one ever presented in Des Moines City and brought Manager Stolte no end of compliments from his patrons. The prologue idea will be used further by Mr. Stolte when the Des Moines is playing features which admit of something effective being staged.

Prologue and stage setting were featured during "The Eyes of Youth" engagement.

Lobby Display Aids in Prolonging Engagement

JOE H. SANDERLIN, manager of the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, Ga., writes us that he has just completed a two weeks' engagement on Blind Husbands," which is "putting 'em over" for a city of the size of Atlanta and about as big an endorsement for a feature as one could find.

It is not to be imagined however that the "Blind Husbands" just naturally drew them in for Manager Sanderlin inaugurated a publicity campaign, that started with the newspapers and ended with artistic presentation and included all the best of modern methods, one of which is the lobby display.

As will be noted in the accompanying cut, the Tudor lobby was tastefully decorated for the showing. The large head with the "blind" across the eyes was so arranged that it "nodded" back and forth and alone was an object of great interest on the part of every person who passed the theatre. Mr. Sanderlin is of the opinion that his lobby display was one of the best of his exploitation campaign stunts but also gives a lot of credit to getting the film started on it's record run, to his newspaper displays which were liberal in size and well framed.

Mr. Sanderlin did not explain just how he got the title of the film up in such big letters, as will be seen in the cut, but we imagine they are cut-outs from a 24-sheet pasted on card board. Anyway they show up well. You will also notice that Mr. Sanderlin played up that peculiar "philanderer" face of Stroheim's, by using cut-outs of him taken from the one sheets.

Fischer Uses "Teaser" Idea on Billboards

THE "teaser" idea is having an inning in the exploitation stories which we are able to record in these columns from week to week. Heretofore it has been the "teaser" newspaper ad which has come in for discussion. Now we have an example where the method has jumped to the billboard, in a recital of how George Fischer, manager of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, exploited Anita Stewart in "Mind the Paint Girl."

Mr. Fischer started the exploitation when he engaged a billboard located on the top of a low building on a corner in one of the busiest downtown shopping sections. Edward J. Weisfeldt, director of exploitation, found a sign painter willing to work in women's clothing and when the scaffold was in place, the stage was set.

On the morning of the sixth day before the opening of the picture the seeming feminine figure appeared on the scaffold and an ever changing crowd occupied the streets below, watching steadily while the following words were blocked out and painted: "Mind the Paint Girl." With these mystic words blocked out the "woman" sign painter quit work for the day and let curious Milwaukee view the result of his labor so far and wonder what it was all about. The next day the sign painter came back and added some more to the wording on the stand, and so on for five days until a full fledged 24 sheet poster had been evolved with date line and theatre designation.

However, Mr. Fischer did not neglect the more ordinary exploitation ideas in his campaign on "Mind the Paint Girl." He was able to secure several effective window display tie-ups, one of which is illustrated in the accompanying cut, and used newspaper space plentifully.

Exploitation Men Devise Novel "Stunt" for "The Miracle Man"

HERE is a little exploitation idea that can be worked with many pictures, providing the title is appropriate and the newspaper in your town is trying to boost its Classified Ad pages. The stunt worked admirably in Cincinnati with the co-operation of Classified Ad. Manager Calhoun of the Cincinnati Post.

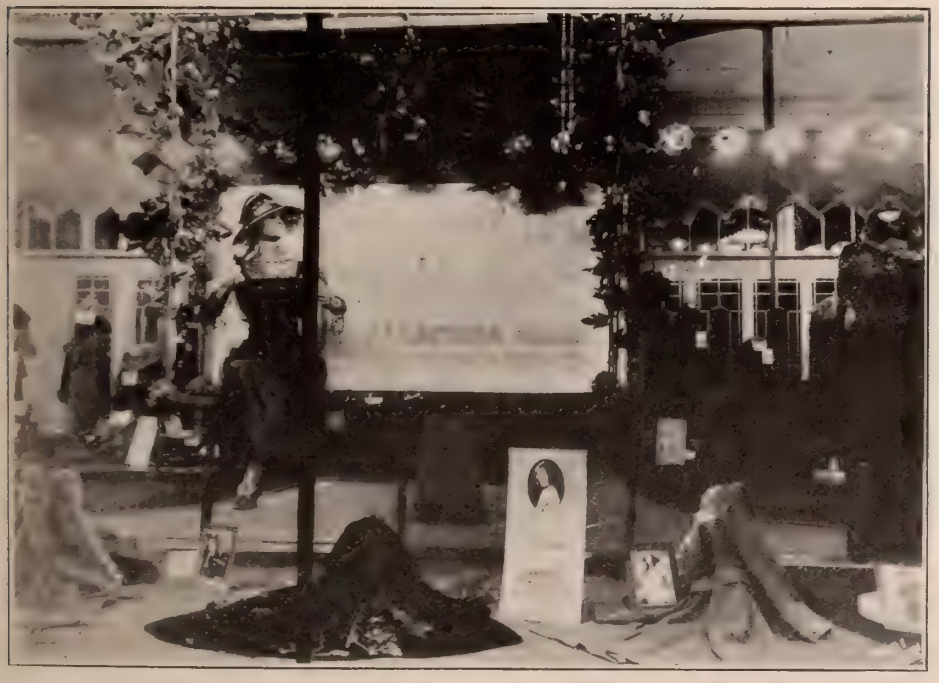
The Exploitation Department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, endeavoring to help the suburban theatres in their runs on "The Miracle Man" devised the "stunt."

A number of shipping tags were printed by the Post as follows: "I am the MIRACLE MAN'S KEY. If you see me advertised in the 'Lost & Found' Column on the want ad page of THE CINCINNATI POST tonight and will take me to the Want Ad Counter of THE POST you will receive 2 FREE TICKETS to the performance of 'THE MIRACLE MAN' at your neighborhood theatre. READ POST WANT ADS."

To these tags were attached old keys. A Post reporter dropped the key and tag at a prominent corner—four a day. Everyone of them was eventually turned into the Post and the free tickets claimed. The Post then wrote daily stories as to who returned the keys and how thoroughly the want ad pages were written.

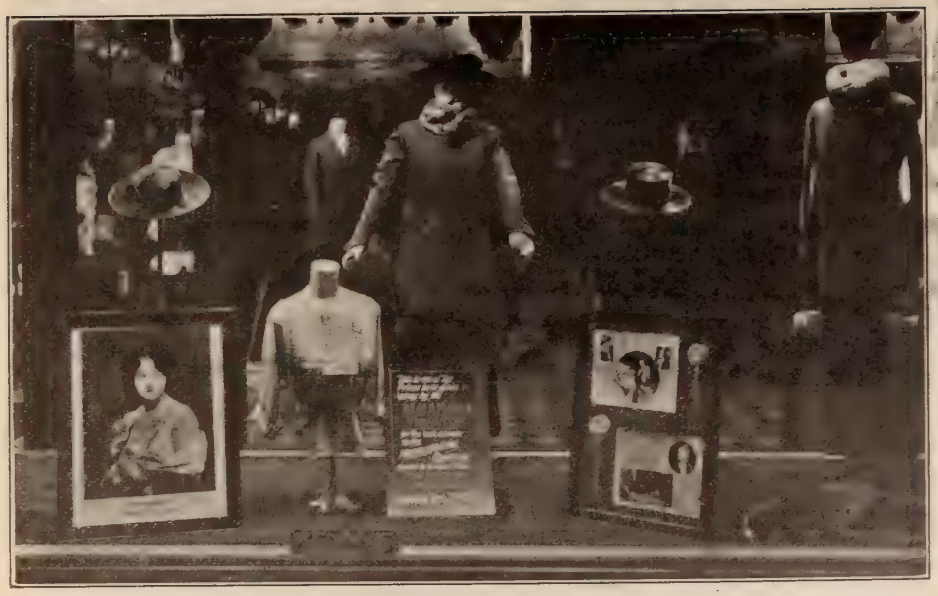
This stunt was a follow up on the "Search for Honest People Stunt" also used in Cincinnati for "The Miracle Man." The play being founded on the theme of Faith in mankind, the Post offered Miracle Man tickets to every honest person returning an article advertised in the Lost and Found Column. Also a ticket to those placing a "Found" ad which resulted in the restoration of a lost article. The stunt went big. From the newspaper standpoint, the idea is of value because it brings in some splendid, bona fide testimonials as to the pulling power of want ads. Also it draws attention to the entire classified ad page because the "Lost and Found" department leads off all classified pages.

There is no reason why this stunt could not be tied up with other pictures. "It Pays To Advertise," for instance, would fit right into the idea.



Window display in connection with the "Mind the Paint Girl," showing at the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee

Nineteen Pages of Service This Week



Window display at Kenny's department store for the Alhambra theatre, Canton, Ohio.

Another Example of Effective Window Display Advertising

ACCORDING to what exhibitors all over the country tell us, it is surprising how easy it is to tie up with department stores in a combination window display and what great results accrue to both the theatre and the mercantile establisment from their use

Showmen who have tried this form of publicity are always enthusiastic over the results obtained. While we do not attempt to do much theorizing in this department, we are taking the liberty of expressing an opinion as to the reasons which induce the stores to give pictures window display space. Come to think about any big store with a lot of windows to keep dressed they must be up against it for something different with which to attract the public. Tying up with the picture man presents possibilities along these lines. There are available a lot of nice photographs and other dressy looking stuff which help make a window look well.

From the photographs we are getting showing window displays of the sort we mention, we gather that the picture the department store likes to hitch up with is one where some of their own product can be given timely publicity.

The ccompanying illustration will show what we are driving at. The story of "The Peace of Roaring River" concerns a girl who thinks she is getting a husband through a sort of matrimonial contest, because she wants a home and someone to look after her. In this is the excuse of the Alhambra theatre of Canton, O., for the matrimonial contest which it is advertising in the window display in the Kenny's Department Store as shown in the illustration. Now, it is evident that the store is in on the prize, the woman's suit, which has been placed on the form and it is also certain that the store itself is going to get a lot of publicity from the stunt. There is an idea in the stunt which the Alhambra has used here, providing you go in for contests, something which many managers, however, taboo since they too often have a "backfire" in the fact that only one or at least a few can win, and the defeated contestants are never satisfied since they have done a lot of work and failed to come in under the wire as a winner after they had been told by all their friends, etc., that there was "nothing to it."

However, if you do approve of contests, and there can be no doubt but that they are business getters, you should keep in mind this stunt of the Alhambra and the way it has been worked in connection with the store.

The Dollar and Cents Value of Absolute Honesty

IT is possible to establish a reputation with patrons so that a personal guarantee means something. When this can be done the advertising possibilities presented for the good feature are advanced many fold.

Just what the display ad means to patrons who have confidence in the theatre manager and the dollars and cents value og absolute honesty with this patrons on the part of an exhibitor can be made, has just been demonstrated in a rather startling way by Harry Watts, manager of the Strand Theatre, Omaha, Neb. On occasions when he had a picture booked which he regarded as being out of the ordinary, Mr. Watts has used a signed statement commending it in connection with straight newspaper advertising.

Preliminary advertising of a week's run of Katherine MacDonald in "The Thunderbolt" at the Strand, however, consisted only of an announcement of the title, the star and the theatre with a signed statement from Watts stating, "This is a splendid production."

"Eyes of Youth" Scores in Cleveland

THE Cleveland showing of "Eyes of Youth," played day and date at the Strand and Orpheum theatres, set a new record for exploitation in the Garden City.

With the co-operation of the Cleveland News-Leader, a search was held all through the entire state of Ohio for eight girls most resembling Clara Kimball Young both as to build and features. Two hundred dollars was divided among these eight girls, as winners of the Clara Kimball Young contest.

But the contest was only the beginning, instead of the end of an exploitation story, as is usual. These eight girls, selected from among hundreds of applicants by a committee of three disinterested parties, became the central figures of the settings that were used as a prologue at both the Strand and Orpheum theatres at "Eyes of Youth" showing.

Four of these girls appeared at the Strand and four at the Orpheum, identical performances being given at both of these Gusdanovic houses. Each one was made up to represent one of the characters portrayed by Miss Young in the picture. Of course, they resembled the famous star to begin with, else they would not have been winners of the contest, so it was easy for them to create the characters represented in the play. Introduced by an Indian Yogi, in native costume, each girl appeared in turn, as through a gazing crystal. A clever arrangement of mirrors, lights and shades, showed the girl through a rainbow fog, completely surrounded by this crystal. The effect was to emphasize the theme of Fate that runs so strongly through "Eyes of Youth." As each girl was shown, the Yogi repeated an allegorical tale in blank verse, appropriate to the character represented.

All this is what happened directly in connection with the showing of "Eyes of Youth." But there's a tale that should precede this. And it is a tale of Lew Thompson's indefatigable effort in telling the whole town about "Eyes of Youth," and about Clara Kimball Young Thompson spent weeks reading the telephone book. He culled the names of every woman listed in the book, and wasn't even phazed when he found there were 25,000 of 'em. He simply went to work and sent out an announcement to every one of those 25,000 women of Cleveland, a classy announcement, too, done in grey and rose. It was a stupendous job, not to mention expensive, but it was a great success. Newspaper advertisements were on a par with other exploitation in connection with the picture. Whole page ads appeared in the Sunday papers, as well as other cuts during the week.

Because this was the first time that any elaborate stage setting was ever used in Cleveland in connection with a picture, and because this first effort was on such a magnificent scale, and because it was such an unquestionable success, the exploitation of "Eyes of Youth" at the Strand and Orpheum theatres, has opened a new era in local motion picture history.

Jack Dempsey Makes Pathe Serial

Heavyweight Champion Works at Brunton Studio on Coast—Fifteen Episodes in Production

IT was announced this week that Jack Dempsey, heavyweight champion, has affixed his signature to a motion picture contract, by the terms of which he is to be starred in a forthcoming Pathe serial.

This announcement, made by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., sets at rest the rumors regarding the champion's future plans. Dempsey made his studio debut at the Robert Brunton studios in Los Angeles on November 24th, on which date he began work in the 15-episode Pathe serial that is intended to introduce him to motion picture fans all over the world.

It is jointly announced by Pathe officials and Jack Kearns, Dempsey's manager, that the motion picture engagement will in no way interfere with the champion's plans for meeting Carpentier, the French champion, in the ring on March 17th.

Robert Brunton has been retained by Pathe to give his personal supervision to the serial, and has been given carte blanche in the matter of expense.

In other words, Mr. Brunet has announced that the Dempsey serial is to be in reality a continued feature to be staged on the same high plane as a feature production. The complete cast, which is soon to be announced, will contain names, it is said, that have meant much to the success of numerous top-notch features. The leading woman is Josie Sedgwick, whose latest appearance was with Will Rogers in "Jubilo." She has played leads also with Roy Stewart, Fred Stone, Jack Richardson and William Desmond.

Jack Dempsey, prize fighter, who is to appear in a Pathe serial

The Dempsey serial is proceeding at the highest speed that is compatible with the standard of excellence demanded by Pathe and Mr. Brunton. It is probable its release will be set for some time in February.

The story in which the champion is appearing is entitled "Dead or Alive," and is by Frederic Chapin, Pathe production manager, and Harry O. Hoyt. The scenario is by Jack Cunningham, who for some time has been associated with Mr. Brunton.

Dempsey is cast in the role of a sturdy young athlete who is working his way through an Eastern college.

Ben Wilson Making New Serial for Hallmark

Ben Wilson announces that the working title for his second serial production to be distributed by Frank G. Hall through Hallmark Exchanges is "The Screaming Shadow," in fifteen episodes of two reels each. Mr. Wilson and Neva Gerber have the starring roles. Duke Worne, who directed Mr. Wilson's last serial, "The Trail of the Octopus," is holding the megaphone over the production of "The Screaming Shadow." J. Grubb Alexander and Harvey Gates collaborated on the continuity. King Gray is photographer. Joe Girard, one of the most prominent characters in serial production, has the leading character part.

Mr. Wilson writes that the first episode of "The Screaming Shadow" has been completed with the exception of the art titles. Wilson and company are working at Universal City, Cal., and the serial is being produced under the supervision of Mr. Wilson.

Riesenfeld Misquoted

Equity Pictures Corporation wishes to correct a statement which appeared in last week's trade papers, in which Dr. Riesenfeld was credited with having said that "Eyes of Youth" was the greatest picture he ever saw. This statement was misquoted, due to a technical error, for Dr. Riesenfeld never made any such assertion.

Capellani Gets Braddon

John D. Braddon has been engaged by the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., as the art director for "The Fortune Teller," the picture which Marjories Rambeau is now making for Pathe.

Universal Buys Four New Stories

Producing Company Announces the Purchase of Popular Tales and Plans Increased Activities

BEGINNING January 1 next year, Universal announces "the production of some of the most elaborate and entertaining photoplays ever made for the public." This company has just completed its biggest production season and during the lull is preparing the studio for even greater activities, it is said. A communication received this week from the studios stated that general repairs were being made, and that some new material was being received.

With this idea in view Universal has purchased four new stories which have been widely read. Mary MacLaren has been chosen as the star in one of these stories, "The Forged Bride," which was written by J. C. Hawks. This story is said to be one of the most dramatic ever assigned to Mary MacLaren, and Universal officials look forward to a master production in this new vehicle.

One of the best works of Francis Holman Day, "The Red Lane," is to be given a screen version. This story is reported to abound with adventure and is said to contain a delightful love interest throughout. The scenes are laid near the Canadian border and the story deals largely with the life of the smugglers in that vicinity.

Bayard Veiller, well known author of "Within the Law" and "The Thirteenth Chair," is the author of "The Primrose Path," which will also be included in Universal's next year's program. Clyde Fitch's famous play, "The Way of the World," in which Mary Mannering starred on the stage, will also be produced.

Cissy Fitzgerald, who is appearing in a series of two-reel comedies to be released by United Picture Theatres of America

TWO years ago we started to produce the group of pictures known as Universal Special Attractions. We told you then that these were to be not only the best pictures that Universal could produce but also the best pictures that anyone could produce.

WHAT happened? This happened. When the year was ended it was found that the Universal product had averaged higher than any other group with the same number of pictures. More than this—it averaged higher than the best pictures from any number of groups. And the Second Year's product topped the First. We made good.

WE now offer you twelve of the Third Year's Pictures--the BIG MONEY TWELVE--so named because we know they will net you your biggest profits and because we have made good on our promises and so are not afraid to ask you the prices that the BIG MONEY TWELVE are worth to you--and to your audiences--and to ourselves. Look thru the list on the two pages following. You will say when they are on your screen--"The finest moving pictures that the Art has yet produced."

Industrial Films to Profit Showmen

Alfred Black Announces Arrangement with Industrial Department of Universal Whereby Exhibitor Will Be Paid Fixed Sum for Showing Industrial Motion Pictures

A STATEMENT issued by Alfred S. Black, President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., is indicative of a stabilizing arrangement reached which will in future give the industrial picture a real position with the exhibitor, who in turn will derive just revenue from such showings. The M. P. E. of A. has come to an agreement on all points with the Industrial and Educational Department of Universal Film, probably the largest producer of such film subjects.

Mr. Black's statement follows:

"Since my election to the presidency of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., which covers every State in the Union, I have devoted much of my time to the problem of educational and industrial motion pictures and their relation to the theatre owners and the public.

"I have reached the conclusion that such pictures are as much a part of American national life as the pictures made exclusively for entertainment, and in this view I am supported by nine-tenths of the exhibitors of the country and other thinking men."

Industrials Necessary

"The only question with exhibitors is, How shall educational and industrial pictures be distributed and shown to the patrons of motion picture theatres?

"For exhibitors to attempt to stop the showing of such pictures would be like trying to sweep the ocean back with a broom. It simply can't be done. Yet the exhibitors as a whole have been going it blindly, and deriving no direct revenue from the industrial and educational use of their screens. Further than that, by reason of careless and unbusinesslike methods, the public has been the loser.

"I now have the privilege of announcing to exhibitors that an arrangement has been made whereby they are to receive direct compensation for the exhibition of industrial and educational pictures, and at the same time assist in providing funds for the support of their national and State organizations, which are constantly engaged in the work of lessening the burdens of taxation, fighting ill-advised and vicious censorship and in general looking after the interests of the exhibitors.

"Industrial and educational motion pictures as we now know them are a development of the last two years, and one company alone is largely responsible for the condition of semi-perfection that now exists. I refer to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and particularly to the Industrial and Educational Department of that company under the general managership of Harry Levey.

"Scientific and industrial development expeditions sent out under the auspices of the Industrial and Educational Department of the Universal are covering all parts of the world. One that I happen to know about has been in Sumatra and the rubber producing districts of the Far East where some thirty millions of feet of motion pictures were made. All phases of tropical life are shown, in addition to the history of rubber from the planting of the pod to the manufacture of goods for human use.

"At a conference in New York on Friday, December 5, with officials of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, I was informed that Universal's Industrial and Educational Department had reached such proportions that it was desirable for the exhibitor to share in the profits realized from the exhibition of industrial and educational pictures.

"An arrangement was entered into whereby motion picture exhibitors of the country shall be paid a fixed sum for the exhibition of industrial and educational motion pictures distributed by the Universal.

"In addition, the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., will receive a percentage of the gross revenue realized by the Universal for the distribution of pictures. This money will go into the general fund of the organization and be used in connection with its taxation, censorship and other welfare work.

"A contract to this effect has been entered into and the exhibitors showing Universal industrial and educational pictures in the future will receive compensation according to terms of the contract, which is eminently satisfactory. When such pictures are exhibited on the screen, according to an official booking arrangement, report to that effect will be made to the officers of the league and settlement will be made on the basis of the returns.

"In this way general circulation is guaranteed and the exhibitor is assured of his share in the profits. The exhibitor will not, as in the past, be asked merely to fill in his program with industrial and educational pictures but be a partner in the enterprise."

Plan Book for Brenon Picture

An Extensive Line of Exploitation Helps Has Been Prepared for the Marie Doro Starring Vehicle

IT is announced that the first special feature to be distributed by Republic Pictures will be the Herbert Brenon picture, in which Marie Doro is the illustrious star. This six reel mystery film will have prints in all of the 22 branch offices this week, and the small army of Republic salesmen are said to be on their toes ready to make a record. Every sort of advertising medium has been provided, according to reports, from a 24-sheet stand to an appropriate lapel button.

The lithograph material is multi-colored and has been engraved from sketches made by Henry S. Potter. Besides the twenty-four sheet stands a fine line of six, three and one sheets are included. A splendid piece of lithograph work has been done on the window-cards. The lobby displays embrace 8 by 10's, 11 by 14's and 22 by 28's illustrations from the picture. Slides in four colors, advertising cuts of original designs, matrices for newspaper work, cuts of scenes from the feature in various sizes and an original and positive box-office magnet in the shape of an advertising novelty never employed before in exploiting a picture are included. "12:10" has the largest line of accessories ever provided the exhibitor to cash in big.

A plan book for "12:10" has been provided. Twelve different kinds of seat-selling stunts are put up to the exhibitor. These are all practical and inexpensive. No special resource is required to convert them to profitable use. They are as good for a large city as for the smallest town.

The press notices in the plan book have been written from a newspaper angle with the single eye to put before the public the strongest appeal of the feature. There are enough of these notices to keep the papers busy for a week or more.

The exhibitor is also told just what element of the picture to play up and how to do it. What is there about the picture that will make it draw, and how to get this to his people. Program readers and "tease copy" are set forth and a number of perfect tieups with newspapers and stores are indicated, and "how to go about" to do it is clearly and tersely told.

Rush Delivery on Anita Stewart Feature

When a print of Anita Stewart's "Mary Regan" was returned to the Cleveland First National Exchange, it was found that 400 feet of one reel were missing. There had been a fire. "Mary Regan" was booked in a Cleveland suburban theatre next day, and that was the only print the Cleveland office had available. The Cleveland exchange "long-distanced" to ask the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co.'s Chicago plant, where the "Mary Regan" negative is kept, whether it could be done.

According to reports, the night watchman received the telephoned S. O. S. at 8:30 in the evening. G. H. Gibson, superintendent of laboratories, was at the plant at 9:30. No golden little moments escaped him. By 11 o'clock a special messenger was aboard a train for Cleveland, carrying the 400 feet of celluloid—and the feature was shown at 11 a.m. in the suburban theatre as per schedule, it is said.

In a 500-word review, The Morning Telegraph of New York City says:

"In the opinion of this reviewer, the Capitol is running one of the three best pictures of the year this week. Its title is "BLIND HUSBANDS" and it is the production of Eric von Stroheim. For detail, atmosphere and penetrating character drawing it is in a class by itself. It would be possible to write at length of the scenic beauties of the picture. It catches the very air and soul of the mountains."

The same reviewer further says:

"Mr. Stroheim's analysis of the character of the officer is a real achievement. It isn't a pretty picture he draws of Von Steuben, but it is a remarkably accurate one. And his acting of the role is immensely clever.

"Francelia Billington, as the wife, and Sam De Grasse, as the husband, also do notable work.

Intends to Show First Ten Robertson-Cole Adventure Scenics—Bowes Likes the Subjects

PROOF of the soundness of the Robertson-Cole prediction that the coming year is to witness a greatly widened popularity of short subjects is shown in the contract which the new Capitol theatre, the largest house in the world, has just closed with the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation for the showing of the first ten of the Robertson-Cole Adventure Scenics.

Explaining how his theatre came to be the first New York house to book the Robertson-Cole Adventure Scenics, Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol, said:

"The Robertson-Cole Adventure Scenics appealed to us on first screening as a unique series, which would interest our patrons. Not the least element in choosing these pictures was the human interest which has been artistically woven throughout. The scenics seem to us quite individual and inviting."

The first of the Adventure Scenics which A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, is sending to the Capitol, opened December 14, as a part of the regular program. It is Adventure Scenic, No. 1, which has been called, "The Forbidden River." This picture shows a daring descent of the Salmon River, in central Idaho, a stream which an official government report declared to be unnavigable.

Jesse G. Sill and H. H. Brownell, who with John Rantz, scenario writer, are leaders in the Adventure Scenics Corporation, personally made this picture with the aid of a most unusual character, Capt. Guleke, a retired sea captain, who has the reputation of being the only white man alive able to pilot a boat through the turbulent rapids of the Salmon River. In a small boat he carried the camera men through the most picturesque parts of the 300 miles of foaming water. From boat and shore they "shot" vistas which have never been surpassed for wild grandeur and beauty.

"The Forbidden River" will be followed by other subjects. Already several of these pictures are completed, and others are under way. Later pictures will be "The Tempest," showing an angry sea whipping the rocky coast of Oregon; "Flaming Ice," showing the rare and glorious effects when the sun plays over a glacier; "Waters of Destiny," being a study of the development of lakes and "Sheep of Leavenworth," a beautiful pastoral picture, showing herds of sheep in the great reaches of Northern Oregon.

Pictures of Cartoon Character

"Bringing Up Father," MacManus' Creation, Will Be Filmed by Christie

THAT another important film enterprise will be started in Los Angeles immediately was announced by Charles H. Christie, general manager of the Christie Film Company, on his return from New York where he closed a contract with William Randolph Hearst and the International Film Company for the production of a series of two-reel film comedies based on the famous series of cartoons, Bringing Up Father, created by George McManus for the Hearst publications.

In accordance with the terms of the contract whereby the well known "Jiggs" will be brought to life on the screen, the comedies will be filmed by the Christie Film Company and directed under the supervision of Al E. Christie.

Johhny Ray, of the well-known vaudeville team of Johnny and Emma Ray, has already arrived in Los Angeles, having been selected by the Hearst organization as being the most acceptable character to portray the role of Jiggs. Ray is already known to stage goers for his Irish characterizations and it is said that he will give an exceedingly life-like portrayal of McManus' famous cartoon personage in reality on the screen.

Other important players who will appear in the two-reel comedy series are yet to be chosen, tests of more than a hundred players having been made. Selection of these characters will be made in time for the production of the first film, which will be started December 15 by Al E. Christie.

In order to carry out this new enterprise, the Christie Company has constructed new buildings on its property at Sunset and Gower streets, where one large open stage is being roofed over to insure favorable conditions of production during the winter. Other stages and a new dressing room building have been built, on account of this new contract and the further demands of the already established Christie Comedies which will be produced as usual on an even larger scale.

"The Blindness of Youth" is being state-righted by Foundation Film Corporation

Conway Tearle has been engaged by Harry Garson to support Clara Kimball Young in her next Equity picture, "The Forbidden Woman."

PRINCE GETS SIMPLEX PROJECTION

While the Prince of Wales on his re cent visit to the metropolis laughe chuckled and applauded the antics of Mu and Jeff on the screen of Fox's Academ of Music on 14th street, a heavy buil quite resourceful looking man sat outsid of the projection room watching with in terest, not the subject upon the screen a much as the manner in which this sam subject was being projected.

This man, familiarly known as "C. W. by the hundreds of projectionists in Ne York City as well as those of the exten sive Fox Circuit, is Charles W. Johnson projection supervisor for William Fox.

Mr. Johnson has served in the latter ca pacity for the past thirteen years, durin which time he has evolved many individ ual ideas toward the improvement of pro jection in the various Fox houses, all o which are noted today for the high-clas manner in which their various film sub jects are treated upon the screen.

To Mr. Johnson goes much of the credi of providing the splendid projection whic characterized the performance in question for under his capable supervision the Sim plex Projectors as well as all other pro jection room equipment is kept in a highly efficient condition.

Mr. Johnson has perfected a projection system in which the Simplex plays an important part in all of the Fox houses and exchanges through the use of his own conception of screen material and preparation as well as in light and stage effects which are carried out in complete detail throughout the Fox Circuit.

Mr. Johnson's contributions to projection problems have appeared in various trade papers.

Harry Ward of Ward's Films, Ltd., London, who has been visiting our shores, left for England on the Mauretania last week, accompanied by his associate Henry Cundy. On the eve of his departure, Mr. Ward gave a farewell dinner which was held in the Yacht Room of the Hotel Astor. It was a representative gathering of film men and members of the press. After the dinner conditions were discussed on the business relationship between England and America from a film standpoint.

Mr. Ward in addressing the guests said that the conditions in the United Kingdom for films was getting better each day and that it was only a matter of a short time when the English market for films would catch up to their pre-war schedule, and with the possibilities of being in a better position to handle American films than they have ever been before.

Mr. Ward, as a token of appreciation for the many courtesies extended him during his visit, presented each of the guests with a very handsome combination card case and memo book.

Mr. Ward's friends, not to be outdone, presented him with a magnificent platinum and gold watch, together with a chain and knife which was suitably engraved.

Among those present were Henry I. Cundy, Walter Hoff Seely, Gerald B. Wadsworth, Gus Schlesinger, M. B. Schlesinger, A. J. McCosker, John W. Semler, Henry L. Sherman, William A. Johnston, George Blaisdell, J. W. Alicoate, J. Dannenberg, A. McClellan, Albert A. Cormier and George W. Newgass.

New Capital Production with Al Jennings

"The Fugitive's Life," the striking narrative of the meeting of Al Jennings, the celebrated ex-bandit with O. Henry, noted writer of short stories, in a drowsy village of Honduras, at a time when the two were able to take part in a revolution brewing just then, has been completed at the Hollywood Studio of the Capital Film Company, under the direction of H. W. Bergman.

The picture is the first of a series of short features which are being made, having as a basis, the life-long friendship which existed between Jennings and Sidney Porter, whose penname of O. Henry made him beloved by thousands who read his fiction.

In the production, Al Jennings, himself, plays the role of the adventurous bandit, while Clarence Apeck is surprisingly similar to the real O. Henry in his portrayal of that character. Vivian Gane appears opposite Al Jennings in those scenes of a romantic nature.

The picture now is being cut and edited, after which it will be shipped East for release at an early date.

"The Sultan of Djazz" is the next of the Cuckoo Comedies to be released. The story permits of much comedy and keeps the Cuckoo girls much in evidence because its scenes are laid in the harem of a Sultan. Bobby Burns and Jobyna Ralston are the featured players.

"Eyes of Youth" in Windy City

Reichenbach Puts Over First Equity Production; Warmly Received by All Classes in Chicago

Clara Kimball Young in a tense moment from "Eyes of Youth," an Equity release

ONE of the most remarkable demonstrations of the susceptibility of the public to bigger and better motion picture productions was demonstrated at the Playhouse, Chicago, where Clara Kimball Young in "Eyes of Youth" played the first of a four weeks' engagement.

Despite severe wind storms along Michigan Avenue, the boulevard fronting the lake, and in spite of rain and flurries of snow, "Eyes of Youth" attracted two hundred and ninety more paid admissions to the house than had ever been attracted before and this also, in the face of advanced prices of admission.

Manager Smith and Director Spencer, following the third day which was the most inclement of the week, announced that "Eyes of Youth" would be kept on for at least a month and that it would be retained if the final week's business justified.

An unusual campaign of advertising was conducted by the Playhouse under the direction of Harry Reichenbach of Equity Pictures.

A consistent policy of large display advertisements, alternating in the larger circulation dailies, were used. Four column twelve inch ads, first in the Examiner, then the American, and then the Evening Post and Journal were used, and showing the excellent spirit of co-operation on the part of the Herald Examiner and American of the Hearst chain and the Evening Post, each day, for fourteen days these three papers ran news stories on the forthcoming engagement and on the day following the opening ran full column reviews with layouts of photos.

The policy of the Chicago Tribune of permitting its reviewer, Mae Tinee, to write her reviews in a facetious vein, and in a light, humorous manner, was anticipated by Reichenbach who sent a mailing list of five thousand club women and men, stating that "Eyes of Youth" was not being advertised extensively in the Tribune because of the Tribune policy of taking films too lightly.

A huge banner stretched across State Street at the corner of Madison, the busiest section of the shopping district, attracted considerable attention, as did a display advertisement thrown on the side of the City Hall by means of a stereoptican machine erected in an office opposite.

Chicago has not responded to a film production in any better fashion, in recent history and the bookings on "Eyes of Youth" already total seventy thousand dollars in Illinois alone.

Asher Brothers, Lubliner and Trinz, Jones Linick and Shaeffer, Balaban and Katz, Cooper and Wallace and all other circuits have already signed for larger runs than is their wont, while independent houses are stretching their engagements, from one to two days more than usual.

San Francisco, Los Angeles, Portland, Newark, New Jersey and Cleveland, Ohio, announce spectacular results from first run of the first Equity picture while Boston opens an indefinite engagement December 10 at dollar prices.

Harry Reichenbach, general exploitation director for Equity, and Miss Young will spend the next two weeks in Boston and Louisville.

Fox Branches in Marseilles and Paris Enlarged

A report from the Fox Film Corporation conveys the information that owing to the great demand for Fox films, it has become necessary for the Fox Film Society Anonyme, as the Paris branch office of Fox Film Corporation is known, to increase its staff materially and to enlarge its quarters. The Fox office at Marseilles has had a similar experience and has augmented its staff, it is said.

An important element in the popularity of Fox Films with the French exhibitors is said to be the fine service furnished to them by the branch offices in that country. It is stated that they not only furnish the exhibitor with every possible aid for insuring a successful exploitation campaign, but supplement this service with liberal newspaper and magazine advertisements and with extensive poster publicity.

"The Lone Wolf's Daughter" Second Production with Louise Glaum to Have Premiere in West

W. W. HODKINSON Corporation announces the premiere presentation in America of J. Parker Read Jr.'s second Louise Glaum special production, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," at the Alcazar theatre, Chicago for a two weeks' engagement beginning December 21. This first booking and presentation of the big Louis Joseph Vance story was made by W. C. Dineen, the general manager of the Moir chain of theatres in Illinois and the first print for the engagement was sent by messenger from the Thomas H. Ince studios in Los Angeles, where Mr. Read's productions are made.

The conditions under which Chicago exhibitors were the first in the country to see this big new production were peculiar. An executive of the Hodkinson organization going to Chicago for a hurried business trip wired ahead that he was bringing a picture in which the big first runs of Chicago undoubtedly would be interested and suggested that these exhibitors be invited for an advance screening on the following day. Perhaps a dozen of Chicago's leading exhibitor factors with individual houses or circuits, accepted an invitation to see a picture whose title, star or producer they did not know until the picture was flashed on the screen. At the conclusion of the showing S. J. Goldman, Hodkinson Chicago manager, closed his first run contract with Mr. Dineen, who, coming from Canada recently to operate their Moir theatres, has had a series of conspicuous successes to his credit in the Rose, Boston and Alcazar theatres.

"The Lone Wolf's Daughter" is now available for pre-release, protected run engagements in the largest cities and has available for pre-release, protected run been booked to date by each first run exhibitor who has seen the picture in the half dozen cities where the prints have arrived for screening. In the Chicago territory, with its first opportunity for inspection, as a trade showing, booking of the first run factors throughout the territory is virtually completed and the volume of business thus far calls for a larger number of prints in simultaneous use in the territory than have ever before worked on a picture distributed in the zone by the Hodkinson organization.

"The Lone Wolf's Daughter" is a thrilling, colorful story of romance, intrigue and action with its scenes ranging from the splendors of Buckingham Palace and the temptingly beautiful home of a master criminal to the mysterious depths of the oriental Limehouse district of London.

Big Contract Given Wm. Duncan

Vitagraph Signs Serial Player; A Million Dollar Serial Is Announced as Coming

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, has signed up William Duncan, the serial star, to a contract which it is said makes Duncan the highest paid artist in his particular field.

Under the new arrangement Duncan will immediately start a super-serial on which it is announced that $1,000,000 will be expended.

In a telegram to John M. Quinn, general manager, Mr. Smith declared that the Duncan productions now on the way will usher in a new era in the serial division of motion pictures. It is his opinion that the productions will establish the permanent achievement of super-serial science.

After signing his new contract Mr. Duncan said: "I am convinced that the day of big serials is here at last, and that from now on every first-class theatre will run these continued subjects in the same fashion as every first-class magazine runs serial stories. It is my ambition to make this coming serial the climax of all my efforts in this line, dramatically, scenically and sensationally."

It will be recalled that Duncan has been surrounded particularly by plot logic. Duncan serials have one and all stood solidly for their possession of "horse sense" dramatic sequence and plausibility.

Sunshine Comedies Said to Be Popular as Features

Statistics just compiled in the office of Fox Film Corporation show that Fox Sunshine Comedies are as popular today as the regular feature pictures being shown by the big motion picture houses.

The supervising director of Fox Sunshine Comedies, Hampton Del Ruth, has five big companies working under his aides. Del Ruth's directors include Jack Blystone, Eddie Cline, Roy Del Ruth, Delmar Lord, K. G. Maclean and several others. His leading comedians are Chester Conklin, Glen Cavender, Tom Kennedy, Harry Booker, Bill Franey, Alice Davenport, Jack Cooper, "Slim" Somerville, Marvel Rae, Ethel Teare, Ed. Kennedy, Harry McCoy, Billie Armstrong and Laura LaVarnie.

First Fay Film Comedy Now Completed

The newly organized Fay Films Company, a producing organization, headed Rupert F. Fry, and several other capitalists of Milwaukee, has completed its first single reel comedy, featuring Harry Cane the "Hurricane of Comedy." The release of 26 one reelers, in which Mr. Cane is to be the central figure, are planned by the new company.

The first picture completed is a comedy thriller from start to finish, containing numerous hair-raising stunts, including dangling from beneath flying aeroplanes and falling down factory chimneys. The stories are being written and the productions directed by Putnam Hoover.

Frank S. Mattison, the general manager of the Fay Films Company, which has offices at 1737 N. Campbell avenue, Chicago, has negotiations now pending, disposing the entire world rights to the pictures. Arrangements have also been made for a permanent studio of the company to be located near Jacksonville, Florida.

Edw. A. MacManus Completing Film, Mott Osborne's Prison Story

Edward A. MacManus is rapidly completing the assembling of his new production, "The Gray Brother," founded on story of prison life by Thomas Mott Osborne and directed by Sidney Olcott. Mr. Osborne who saw the production Monday expressed his extreme gratification with what he describes "as a truly marvelous visualization of a heart throbbing human drama." Mr. MacManus hopes to announce the date of the release of his production within a few days.

"Sky-Eye" Announced as Ready for Release

The Sol Lesser organization has completed final details for the release of "Sky-Eye," the serial picture produced with the co-operation of the United Statees Army Air Service by William Steiner. They will release sometime in December on a state-right basis and are now starting on an advertising campaign to exhibitors and public. Mr. Lesser plans to sell all the territory except that in which he has his own exchanges, namely, California, Nevada, Arizona, Illinois, Ohio, Kentucky and Greater New York.

The story is a romance of the Texas Oil Fields and the adventure in aircraft, and is probably the first exponent of its kind in which most of the locale is laid in the clouds.

The picture affords many splendid opportunities for exploitation, the most important being a tie-up closed with the Curtiss Aeroplane and Motor Corporation. The Curtiss people will provide aeroplanes in each one of the twenty leading cities of the United States and Canada where they have branches, and will co-operate direct with the state-right buyer and exhibitor in their advertising and exploitation. As there were over sixty Curtiss planes used in this production a splendid opportunity for this tie-up is afforded.

There are two complete sets of posters, namely two ones, two threes, two sixes and one twenty-four sheet, embodying the most thrilling stunts in the picture as well as the 'love clutch.'

Christie Plot Variety Shows in Three Offerings

Making good his assertion in the announcement last Spring of the Christie special comedies in two reels, that he would offer a variety of stars and of plots in his latest contributions to film comedy, A. E. Christie, chief director of the Christie Comedy Company, offers three new Christie Specials as an example of the progress made in presenting "specials that are specials" in two reels.

With plots of wide variance and three different stars heading the feature casts, the current specials are offered as examples of Christie's aim.

"A Roman Scandal," and "Go West Young Woman" are two of the offerings. The January offering is not titled.

Vera Roehm in Physical Culture Pictures

Miss Vera Roehm, physical culturist is the chief originator and director and one of the leading exponents of "Poise, Grace and Beauty," a series of health and physical culture pictures shortly to be produced by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the Paramount Magazine.

The first release will be on December 28 and will be followed by succeeding lessons in hygiene and physical training on a weekly basis for three weeks, and then biweekly in the Paramount Magazine.

Four Universal Series On Way

Three of These Are Being Turned Out at Universal City; Fourth Under Production in the Far East

FOUR new serials are now in course of production by Universal, each of which is announced as a distinct novelty in the way of chaptered thrillers. Three of them are being produced in and around Universal City, while the other is being filmed in the Orient.

Universal declares that "The main difference in these episodic melodramas lies in the fact that they have not been constructed merely for the sake of thrills, but are plausible stories, containing sufficient tense situations and stirring climaxes to lend themselves to serial treatment."

"The Man Hunter," starring Art Acord, supported by Mildred Moore, is a western story, directed by Reeves Eason. In the cast also appear George Fields, Beatrice Dominguez, Charles Newton, Tote Dugrow and others. This production is now in its sixth episode.

Al Russell is now working on the thirteenth episode of "The Lion Man," based on "The Strange Case of Cavendish," by Randall Parrish. Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Parrin are featured in this serial, with the assistance of Henry Barrows, Gertrude Astor, Leonard Clapham, Slim Pagett and Mack Wright.

A serial entitled "The Vanishing Dagger," starring Eddie Polo, supported by Thelma Percy, G. Norman Hammond, Ray Ripley, Ruth Royce, Laura Oakley, Texas Watts and Captain Jarvis, has just been started at Universal City, under the direcmultiple reel comedies, at the Rialo thetion of Jacques Jaccard.

The fourth serial, "The Petals of Lao Tze," is being filmed in Japan and other countries in the far east. The star is Marie Walcamp, and the director is Henry McRae. Miss Walcamp's leading man is Harland Tucker and other important players are George Nively, Wadsworth Harris and Otto Lederer.

Exploitation Aids Ready for "The Superman"

According to a report from W. H. Productions Company, the Tower Film Company announces that there is now ready a special press book on the production, "The Superman." This book is said to cover every phase in the exploitation of this unique melodrama. There is illustrated a complete line of posters and the 8 x 10 and the 11 x 14 lobby photographs. Attractive single and double column newspaper advertising cuts are specially prepared with suggested "copy" for the exhibitor's use. The announcement also includes mention of valuable out-door displays, box-office, lobby and window displays.

Lloyd Comedy at Big New York Playhouses

Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli theatre, presented Harold Lloyd for the first time at the Rivoli in his new series of $100,000 two-reel comedies, when "Captain Kidd's Kids" was shown there during the week of November 30. Dr. Riesenfeld featured "Bumping into Broadway," first of the Lloyd series of atre during the week of November 2.

Goldwyn's New Year Offerings

Eight Big Productions, Each Backed by Direct to Public Advertising, Are Scheduled

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORP., will enter the new year with a remarkably strong list of productions comprising the first eight releases, in which there are one Eminent Authors Picture, one Rex Beach, two starring Tom Moore, one Mabel Normand, one Madge Kennedy, one Pauline Frederick and one Jack Pickford. The order of issue just authorized by Samuel Goldwyn reads: "Pinto," "Toby's Bow," "The Silver Horde," "The Cup of Fury," "The Blooming Angel," "Duds," "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" and "The Paliser Case."

All of the productions selected to lead off the Goldwyn releases for the coming year have been completed at the Culver City Studios and advance prints of most of them have been shipped to New York and viewed by Mr. Goldwyn before pronounced ready for the market.

Of great importance to the exhibitor is the fact that every picture on the list will be backed by the "direct to the public" advertising campaign launched in hundreds of newspapers, December 1.

As a follow-up for the phenomenally successful "Jinx," another Mabel Normand production was selected as the opening release on the new schedule. It is "Pinto," a story written and directed by Victor Schertzinger, presenting the Goldwyn comedienne in the character of a western cowgirl.

"Toby's Bow" is a Tom Moore picture, adapted from the stage play by John Taintor Foote and directed by Harry Beaumont. It presents a swift-moving, intensely interesting story that advances to an unexpected climax. In the notable cast supporting Mr. Moore, Doris Pawn occupies the place of first prominence. Others include Arthur Housman, Macey Harlam, Ruby LaFayette, Augustus Phillips and Colin Kenny.

With "The Girl From Outside" still at the height of its popularity, Goldwyn will release another Rex Beach picture, "The Silver Horde." According to advance reports, it excels even earlier productions of the greatest of all interpreters of life in the far North.

In novel form, "The Cup of Fury" has been accorded a place among the finest of Rupert Hughes' works. Profiting by a wide circulation in book form, "The Cup of Fury" is still fresh in the minds of thousands of readers who will be anxious to see the pictorial adaptation as presented by Helene Chadwick, Rockliffe Fellows, Sydney Ainsworth, Florence Deshon and other players of equal reputation. T. Hayes Hunter directed the production.

The fifth picture on the new schedule is the Madge Kennedy starring vehicle, "The Blooming Angel," a screen version of a Saturday Evening Post story selected because of its peculiar suitability to the Goldwyn star. Then comes "Duds," now being completed by Tom Moore, under the direction of Tom Mills at the Culver City Studios.

"The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," from the novel of the same name by John Fox, Jr., marks Jack Pickford's debut as a Goldwyn star.

Concluding the series of eight productions is "The Paliser Case," a dramatic story starring Pauline Frederick, directed by William Parke. Albert Roscoe is Miss Frederick's leading man and numbered in the company are James Neill, Hazel Brennan, Kate Lester, Alec Francis, Warburton Gamble, Edgar Saltus and Carrie Lee Ward.

"Tong Man" Looms Up Largely

Robertson-Cole Expect It to Be Best Hayakawa Has Made—Critics See It Favorably

PREVIEWS of "The Tong Man," current Robertson-Cole release, starring Sessue Hayakawa, indicate that the picture is one of the very best in which Hayakawa has ever appeared. Both trade paper and newspaper critics were struck with the swift action which characterizes the picture, and predict that it will make Nayakawa many new friends, as well as keeping all his old ones interested.

"The Tong Man" was taken for preview showing by the management of Loew's New York Theatre, where large audiences saw it. When seen, a day or two previous in the Robertson-Cole projection room, by trade paper reviewers, the melodramatic and gripping character of the picture was remarked upon. Opening with a crime in Chinatown, "The Tong Man" moves swiftly and continuously up to its last foot. Never is the ultimate happiness and safety of the hero and heroine assured until the very end.

The Tong Man" is based upon Clyde C. Westover's novel, "The Dragon's Daughter," a small green volume, decorated with a yellow dragon, which was a best seller, and crammed from cover to cover with Chinatown atmosphere by its author, a former San Francisco newspaper man, who wrote absorbingly of the greatest of all Celestial colonies in this country. The authentic, rich Chinese atmosphere which characterized the book has in no wise been lost in this picture, which was directed by William Worthington, in the Haworth Studios.

Hayakawa himself took charge of the art direction, and saw to it that the interiors are resplendent with Oriental art. From his home in Hollywood he transported to the studio a great wealth of Oriental art objects. These included bronze lanterns, the large paper lamps and umbrellas which can only be obtained in the Orient, idols of all sorts, curiously carved dishes, vases and incense burners of metal and of china, and so on.

Edward Griffith, who recently joined Vitagraph's staff of directors, is putting real O. Henry atmosphere into "A Philistine in Bohemia," which is now in the making as a two-reel subject.

George Larkin in an exciting moment in "The Tiger's Trail" a Pathe release

Lloyd Hughes Is Latest Ince Star

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that a new star has been added to the Thomas H. Ince firmament in the person of Lloyd Hughes, whose work in the recent Ince productions for Paramount-Artcraft have met with the approval of the Famous Players-Lasky officials. Mr. Hughes recently signed a contract covering a period of five years.

He is said to be among the youngest actors of the silver screen to become a star. After finishing his regular schooling, he took up the study of dramatics with a view to going on the stage but gave this up in a short time when an opportunity presented itself to enter the motion pictures. Some of the productions in which he is said to have played important roles are: "The Turn in the Road," "The Haunted Bedroom," "An Innocent Adventuress," "The Virtuous Thief," and "Dangerous Hours."

Petrova Sells a Play

"The Ghoul," a one-act satirical drama by Mme. Olga Petrova, has just been purchased by Ainslee's Magazine, and the Polish artiste has the distinction of being the first author to have a play in this publication, which has hitherto been devoted entirely to stories, essays and poems. "The Ghoul" is one of a series of playlets by the versatile Petrova, which will afterwards be gathered into book form. It is very possible that Madame may herself appear in this play as a vaudeville offering for next year.

Capable Cast in Tarzan Film

A strong cast headed by Gene Pollard in the title role, has been assembled by Numa Pictures for the production "The Return of Tarzan."

George Romain, Franklin B. Coates, Armond Cortez, Walter Miller, Estelle Taylor, Betty Turner, Donna Pepita Ramirez are other players prominent in the cast.

George M. Merrick is supervising the production.

F. P.-Lasky Party Views Europe in the Re-Making

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that as a result of the photographic work carried on by the Burton Holmes party abroad it will be enabled to offer a series of travel pictures that for interest and unusual features will surpass any short-subject reels of the kind ever turned out.

Mr. Holmes and his party left New York in June for the purpose of getting continental Europe in the re-making. After crossing from England to France, the party set to work at once and photographed the battlefields and war-torn areas of Northeastern France from the North Sea to the southernmost sector of the battle line. Ypres, St. Mihiel, and the Argonne are said to have received special attention.

Belgium was then completely covered, and after that the party journeyed to Alsace-Lorraine. Pictorial views were next secured of the Rhineland and the operations of the American and Allied armies of occupation. At this point Mr. Holmes returned to America, and the party continued its camera work under the direction of Mr. Cowling, journeying through Czecho-Slovakia, Austria, and into Switzerland. At present he is reported to be "shooting" the Pyrennes in Southern France.

Vitagraph Film of "The Fortune Hunter"

According to a report recently received from the offices of the Vitagraph Company, "Tom Terriss has just completed his latest super-feature, 'The Fortune Hunter,' from the celebrated stage success of the same name, starring Earl Williams. He is about to commence upon a version of 'Captain Swift,' which was one of the most popular mystery dramas of the stage ten years back, both in this country and in England. Earl Williams will again be the feature player of this production. It is interesting to note that Mr. Terriss was one of the original members of the play when first produced in England."

Lloyd Signed for Three Years

Paul Brunet of Pathe Secures Signature of Comedian; Option on Future Services Included

THE services of Harold Lloyd, in his popular comedies, are assured to Pathe for a long term, following an agreement, which gives satisfaction to all parties concerned. Just before he returned to California to resume work on his new series of $100,000 two-reel productions, Lloyd was signed up by Mr. Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., to a contract which binds him to comedies for distribution by Pathe during the next three years. It provides that Lloyd receive one of the highest salaries and guarantees paid to any motion picture star, and contains an option giving Pathe the right to renew the covenant for another long term.

Lloyd was enthusiastic over the arrangement and declared "so long as Pathe continues to treat me as it does you can count on me rooting with the rooster for the rest of my life. It is an inspiration to give me the very best that I have to give and that's what I am going to do!"

Hal E. Roach, president of the Rolin Film Co., producer of the Lloyds said:

"During the four years that I have produced for Pathe, there has never been a time that there has not been a courteous and hearty welcome for me in their New York office. And the communications that I have received from them have been those of gentlemen and business men. The whole organization, from the salesmen in the exchanges to Mr. Brunet, vice-president and general manager, I feel are my friends and are boosting for our profits. I have produced for Pathe under three different administrations but never has Pathe had the pep and go that they have at the present time. Mr. Brunet inspires one with confidence in his business ability and the personal note which he puts in all his dealings."

It was at the request of Mr. Charles Pathe that Lloyd and Mr. Roach came to New York to meet the head of the great international motion picture organization, and to lengthen the terms of Lloyd's contract with Pathe Exchange, Inc.

"We have watched with special interest the steady development of Harold Lloyd as an entertainer," said Mr. Brunet in commenting upon the contract, which assured the services of the young comedian to Pathe virtually for an indefinite period.

"Lloyd is in a class all by himself and his humor is so universal in its quality as to be understood any place in the world where motion pictures are shown.

"We have all along considered Lloyd a most valuable asset, and feel that neither effort nor expense should be spared in the most thorough exploitation of the new two-reel comedies, which have opened so auspiciously in the big first run houses of New York, and the principal cities of the United States."

Lyons and Moran Sign Again

Comedians Stay with Universal Under Long Term Contract—Will Make Five-Reel Subjects in Future

TWO Irish comedians have decided to stay with their old home, "Universal City." Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have signed a long term contract with Carl Laemmle, Universal's president to produce comedies, not two-reelers as they have in the past but some five reel high class domestic ones. This contract was signed this week and joy reigned in the hearts of the Universal officials as well as the two comedians.

Lyons and Moran have been the stars in two reel comedies for some time and are among the oldest inhabitants of that great Western studio of Universal. For the past two years they have produced on the average of one comedy a week and their success has been growing constantly. Today Lyons and Moran comedies are shown in practically all the leading houses of the country. Their style of comedy is of the highest type and in their new program they expect to produce the best comedies on the market.

This is not a new idea with the two comedians and they have at the present time several good stories on hand with which to begin production.

The announcement of this new contract with Universal has more than unusual significance. It means much to the picture art in general. It is direct evidence of the advancement of the art of picture comedies and also the fact that the Universal company intends to give to American exhibitors only the highest type of productions.

When Mr. Laemmle announced the signing of the contract he said: "I have every faith in the plans of these two comedians. They have shown they are capable and I believe they will set a new standard in comedy productions. We intend to give them the very best of backing and support."

Ackerman-Harris Books the Famous Directors Series

Hugh B. Dobbs, branch manager of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, Portland, Oregon, wired this week to W. F. Rodgers, general sales manager of Hallmark, that he has placed contract for the Famous Directors' Series with Ackerman-Harris Hippodrome theatre. Ackerman-Harris run a combination vaudeville and picture theatre in their Hippodrome.

A. H. Huot, branch manager for Hallmark in Seattle, Wash., writes that he closed with Ackerman-Harris for the Famous Directors' Series in Seattle, Tacoma and Spokane. This, according to Mr. Dobbs, places the Famous Directors' Series solid in the fourteen towns in the Northwest.

McManus Picture Now in Shape

Titling and Cutting of "The Gray Brother," Despicting Prison Conditions, is Complete

EDWARD A. MacManus has completed "titling" his latest and most massive production, "The Gray Brother," in the collaboration of which he had the assistance of Thomas Mott Osborne, who gained national fame through his humane administration of penitentiaries. Basil Dickey supplied the romance and Mr. Osborne the reality of things as they exist within prison walls, a combination that weaves the most thrilling story ever written for a screen production.

It is said that Mr. MacManus was given opportunities to visualize prison brutalities and cruelties as they existed under the old system of prison management and which do exist today in some prisons into which the spirit of compassion and uplift as Mr. Osborne interprets it, has never entered. Such a revelation visualized will make the public gasp with indignation, if not horror, though Mr. MacManus' production is not a brief in any sense for prison propaganda, but a straight emotional drama with situation and climaxes revealing brutality and cruelty only where they concern those characters portraying criminal tendencies and which have been drawn from both the upper and lower strata of society.

Only December 4, Mr. Osborne while in Chicago defied the State of Illinois to order a prison inquiry, declaring that the Joliet institution was an infamous prison and its system of management a cruel and brutal one.

Among the screen players in the production may be mentioned: Helen Ferguson, Elsie McLeod, Helen Lindroth, Vivienne Osborne, Ann Egleston, Cecil Kern, Edward Davis, Sidney D'Albrook, Tammany Young, Harold Thomas, Ralph Delmore, John B. Cooke, Joseph Marquis and Thomas Brooks.

"Woman in Grey" Given a Run

Production from Williamson Story Pleases; Special Photoplay Edition of Book Probable

"A WOMAN IN GREY," the new George H. Wiley serial starring Arline Pretty, is claimed to have made good the promises of its producer at a private showing for the press last week.

Mr. Wiley's departure in serial making, as evidenced by his production of this C. N. and A. M. Williamson story, has attracted the attention of Doubleday Page Co., publishers of the novel, who have expressed a desire to publish a special photoplay edition of the book. This book, which will be illustrated by stills of the play, offers an excellent opportunity for exhibitor tie-ups with local bookshops, which should be mutually beneficial.

An elaborate campaign book is now in preparation. Features of the plan book include a series of excellent advertising layouts to be used in conjunction with the showing of the picture, and many varied newspaper stories which, it is said, will arouse interest in the serial as it progresses.

Arline Pretty, the star of the production, is well known for her serial with Vitagraph and Pathe. The rest of the cast, including Henry G. Sell, leading man in so many Pearl White serials, are among the better known serial players: Fred Jones, Margaret Fielding, James Heenan, Ann Brody, Walter Chapin and Jack Newton.

James Vincent, whose better known productions include "The Spirit of Lafayette," the Pathe serial "The Hidden Hand" and several features, directed the picture, and Walter Richard Hall is responsible for the continuity.

Griffith Uses Try-Out Sites

One night recently Mr. Griffith sent one of his new pictures for a trial exhibition to the Westchester Theatre in Mount Vernon, and that night, accompanied by G. W. Bitzer, his chief photographer; Lillian Gish and her mother, Robert Harron, Clarine Seymour, Richard Barthelmess and others of his players, he quietly slipped into town from the Mamaroneck studios and "went to the picture show" just as any other movie fan would go. Not a soul in the audience knew of the presence of the distinguished party.

About a week later Mr. Griffith had another production ready for this important test before an audience. This time he selected the Hamilton Theatre in Yonkers, and took with him, in addition to the players already mentioned, Dorothy Gish, Carol Dempster, Kate Bruce, Elmer Clifton and a staff of executives, including Albert L. Grey, his general manager.

The news soon traveled back to Mount Vernon, and now the two towns are at dagger points over the question of who gets the next Griffith tryout.

Two Directors for Serial "The Master Mind"

The opening episodes of "The Master Mind," a new Reeve and Grey serial, were started at their Flushing studio last week. The story features J. Robert Pauline, the famous hypnotist and vaudeville performer.

Two directors are at work on the new serial which is called "The Master Mind." William Davis, formerly of Fox and Metro fame, is working in conjunction with Fred W. Sittenham. The plan of two directors working at the same time is a novel one, inasmuch as it permits a far greater expenditure in the matter of sets, because the actual shooting time is materially reduced and an expensive cast is worked a shorter time than is necessary with only one director.

Long Island Estate Acquired for Studios

The Ferndale Film Studios Inc. have acquired the country estate known as "Ferndale," which is perhaps one of the most beautiful of the many estates on Long Island.

The corporation has contracted to build a modern moving picture studio, being the last word in photoplay equipment; construction to be completed on or about May 1, 1920.

A colony of bungalows have already been constructed upon the estate which will provide delightful accommodations for the artists and those connected with the corporation. In addition to the bungalows already completed and fully equipped, is one of the largest private swimming tanks in America, holding 80,000 gallons of water. There is also on the estate one of the most beautiful private lakes on Long Island, having a shore front of nearly 3,000 feet.

The directors of the company are: Mr. C. K. F. Andrews, Miss L. Minnie Kirmmse, and Mr. E. G. W. Deitrich. Miss Kirmmse will have complete charge of the company's future operations.

The corporation has an authorized capital of $500,000 of which $300,000 has been fully paid in.

Florence Reed Back Before Camera

Florence Reed, the United Picture Theatres of America's emotional star, returned to New York last Monday and immediately began preparations to begin filming a new feature at Mr. A. J. Bimberg's studios.

Miss Reed has just closed an especially successful tour with her speaking stage production, "Roads of Destiny," by Channing Pollock. It was necessary for United's star to terminate her road tour because of her motion picture contracts, and as her latest feature, "The Eternal Mother," is about to be released, Miss Reed had to forsake the speaking stage temporarily to pose before the camera and keep up the schedule on her United releases.

It is now Miss Reed's intention to remain in New York until she has finished at least two new photodramas.

Hadley to Create Another Musical Novelty

Hopp Hadley, whose energies in combining music and pictures have thus far resulted in two interesting developments along this line, has been working quietly for some time on another novelty about which he has little to say at its present stage of near-completion.

In his latest novelty, which he calls a "movical" comedy, a company of musical-comedy artists appear on the stage in connection with his picture. The present title of the production is "The Movie Girls Revue" and it is now in rehearsal. The characters on the stage are made up and costumed like characters in the picture.

"Oil" Next Guy Empey Offering

New Production Will Allow Scope for Star's Fun Making Talent; Work Begins December 15

GUY EMPEY Pictures Corporation, which produced the big special production "The Undercurrent" recently seen at the Capitol Theatre with Guy Empey in the stellar role, announces that its next production, to be started immediately, is an American photo drama entitled "Oil." For the making of this picture space has been secured at the Paragon studio at Fort Lee where Emile Chautard is working on his Mayflower Productions. Guy Empey and his director, Wilfrid North, will share the studio with Mr. Chautard during the filming of "Oil," which is expected to require a period of from seven to ten weeks, as the photoplay is to be given a rich and costly production involving many elaborate scenes and at least one mammoth set. The actual filming of "Oil" will start at the Paragon on December 15. Casting is now under way, and announcement will be made later of the many prominent photoplay folk who have been put under contract for the forthcoming production.

"Oil" will be made as a major feature. It will be given careful and costly production, and will be offered as a special attraction for presentation in houses of the highest class. The picture will not run less than six reels.

In announcing the title of his forthcoming production, Arthur Guy Empey lays stress upon the fact that "Oil" will be a screen offering made for entertainment only. The picture will deal neither with war interests nor with propaganda. It will, for the first time, present Mr. Empey in a role replete with comedy and those who know predict that photo-play patrons will receive a very pleasant surprise when Guy Empey's fun-making talents are presented via the screen. Mr. Empey, in the two photoplays which he has already offered the public—"Over the Top," produced and distributed by Vitagraph and "The Undercurrent" produced by Mr. Empey's organization and distributed by Select—has established his reputation as an actor of real worth and ability. His sincerity of purpose and earnestness of portrayal have been widely remarked and have evoked much favorable comment from the critics. In "Oil" Guy Empey will prove his versatility by portraying a role which, while calling for moments of great earnestness and a depth of appeal is nevertheless so packed with humor that at times it becomes hard to say whether the part is one belonging to comedy or to straight drama. As a matter of fact, "Oil" is a drama, a drama of wholesome American life, laid in the present day, but the fun engendered by the turns and twists of the story is so continuous and so consistent, that at times the most serious aspect of the story is lost in the mirth it provokes.

One fact which Mr. Empey emphasizes in connection with the forthcoming production is that it has nothing to do, either directly or remotely, with the war or with any war, or with matters military.

While the Guy Empey Pictures Corporation is not yet ready to announce full details of the cast and the supporting company which will surround Mr. Empey in his new picture, it is known that Florence Evelyn Martin, who supported him in "The Undercurrent" will again be seen as his leading lady in "Oil." Wilfrid North, who directed both of Mr. Empey's previous photoplay productions will again direct.

"Lost Battalion" Engagement Extended

According to an announcement from W. H. Production Company business at the Rialto in Rochester, the entire week of November 16, led the management to continue the picture for another week.

Strong Stories for Fox Players

Five Stories by Well-Known Writers Are Purchased for Farnum, Walsh and Other Players

WILLIAM FOX, whose established policy it now is to draw upon distinguished authors as frequently as possible for his screen material, announces the purchase of five more such stories for use by his stars.

"The Orphan," claimed by many readers of popular fiction to be the one of the greatest western stories ever written, has been secured as a vehicle for William Farnum. The book was written by Clarence E. Mulford.

This is the first of Mr. Mulford's books to be utilized by Fox Film Corporation, and it is planned to give it an elaborate production. The title role is one which should fit Mr. Farnum admirably.

Roy Somerville, who has recently been associated with William Fox as adaptor of William McLeod Raine's "Eastward Ho!" in which William Russell was starred, has begun work on the screen adaptation of "The Orphan," and the continuity is well under way.

Also for use by William Farnum, William Fox has purchased from Alan Sullivan the screen rights to that well-known author's story, "The Honor of the Force." This story was published in the Popular Magazine in March, 1917, and was immediately recognized as one of the most graphic word pictures ever drawn of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police and the dangers which surround the daily lives of this body of heroic red-blooded men.

Fox has purchased the motion picture right to one of the season's best magazine stories, "The Iron Rider." The author is Frank L. Packard, most recently famed as the author of the book from which "The Miracle Man" was adapted for the screen.

"The Iron Rider" is the second of the Parkard stories to be purchased by William Fox—the first being a strong dramatic work entitled "From Now On."

The name of Gelett Burgess, novelist, writer of short stories and essays, has been added to the long list of prominent authors contributing material from which Fox Entertainments are produced. The screen rights of this popular author's most successful novel, "Find the Woman," have been secured. The story is not of the mysterious type, as might be assumed from the title. It is a finely balanced, gripping drama in a series of graphic scenes, with an intensely interesting comedy counter-plot.

With the announcement of the purchase of this book comes the added information that in all probability "Find the Woman" will be prepared for the use of George Walsh, who now is at work on "The Shark," in which he is being directed by Del Henderson.

Henry Clifford Colwell, author of "The Penalty," is among the most gifted of dramatic writers. He has given to the stage several equally distinctive plots, and also has written many popular short stories during the past few years.

With the screen rights of "The Penalty," William Fox has purchased a clever adaptation of the play. This adaptation, made under the title "The Attorney for the Defense," is the work of Carlyle Moore, a well-known dramatic writer.

Madlaine Traverse, who at present is busy at the Fox studios in California making "What Would You Do?" has been selected by Mr. Fox as the star for the screen adaptation of "The Penalty."

Henley Will Maintain Standard

Competent Personnel Surrounds the Producer; Second Feature Ready for Cutting

WITH "Skin Deep," another of Mrs. Sidney Drew's adaptations and Hobart Henley's second big feature soon to be released through Pathe nearing the cutting room, much might be said of the personnel he has assembled to assist him in the production of his new pictures.

Mr. Henley first became known to the trade and screen fans while playing leads with Universal six years ago. However, acting for the camera meant nothing more to him than gaining experience to do bigger things later on. During those years, Mr. Henley had but one ambition—to produce worth-while pictures that would stand firm because of their story value, rather than because of the name of the star.

"The so-called star system is one of the biggest detriments in the film business," Mr. Henley said the other day. "If a star is popular in one section of the country and not in another, his unpopularity excludes the exhibition of the production in question and tends to lessen large distribution. On the other hand, if a production is of real value from a story standpoint and is properly cast with suitable types, it will have a vogue in every territory and a chance for big business.

"In planning my present production, I gave great care and forethought to the type of story I would select and to the people to play in them. While I am not featuring a star, my entire cast is made up of men and women of experience and ability."

Acting as Mr. Henley's "Good Man Friday" is Warren V. Fremme who is assisting him in his direction. Fromme entered the picture game via Wid; to eulogise on his picture exepriences would take space for another story. That he can deliver the goods we know by his rapid re-instatement in the Henley forces following his discharge from service.

George Archainbaud has completed directing June Caprice's latest Albert Capellani production, "Little Mother Hubbard," for Pathe release. The story is from the play of Oliver D. Bailey, "Liza Ann," and gives Miss Caprice some of the most splendid opportunities of her screen career.

Griffith First National Offering December 28

Marking the accomplishment of a decided feat in photoplay production, "The Greatest Question," D. W. Griffith's initial picture through First National Exhibitors' Circuit, will be released Dec. 29, according to a special announcement.

Dealing with the loves of plain folks and the effects of their belief in the hereafter, this production stands alone as the first photoplay to attempt to picturize the great questions which are being discussed by leading scientists and authors, many of whom claim to have received messages from the Great Beyond.

Included in the cast are Lillian Gish, who plays the part of an orphan girl; Robert Harron, a country boy, and George Fawcett, a heartless land owner.

Topics of Day Urges Xmas Seal Buying

The attention of fifteen million people is being drawn daily to the Red Cross Christmas Seal Campaign for 1919 by a special topic about this worthy work shown on the screen in a current program of The Literary Digest "Topics of the Day." Amedee J. Van Beuren, president of Timely Films, Inc., producers of this popular screen subject, offered the co-operation of his organization for the Seal Campaign and it was readily accepted by James R. Crowell, Publicity Director of the Drive.

Heading the current program is the following pertinent paragraph:

"150,000 die of tuberculosis every year in the United States. You can help prevent this. BUY RED CROSS X'MAS SEALS —ALL THE YEAR ROUND!"

Fellowes with Talmadge

It was announced this week that Radcliffe Fellowes will be leading man for Constance Talmadge in "In Search of a Sinner," the star's fourth First National production. Others in the cast will be William Roselle, Arnold Lucy, Lillian Worth, Corliss Giles, Louise Peters and Ellen Carter Kerrington. The story was adapted by John Emerson and Anita Loos from a comedy produced on the stage some years ago

Realarts Get Long Run in Denver House

Following the Realart occupation of Washington, D. C., during which Tom Moore showed productions of this company for five consecutive weeks at his Rialto and Garden theatres, another big tie-up is announced for a three weeks continuous Realart Program at the America theatre, Denver.

A. G. Talbott, managing director of the America, has inaugurated his Realart run with Mary Miles Minter's "Anne of Green Gables," which has drawn from him a gratifying telegram testifying to capacity business and enthusiastic comments by patrons for the film and star. During the past week Realart Pictures Corporation has received many other messages of praise from exhibitors who have shown Mary Miles Minter in her first Realart production.

Juanita Hansen to Appear in Pathe Serials

Juanita Hansen, well known film star, has signed a contract to appear in Pathe serials, according to an announcement this week from Paul Brunet, Vice President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Miss Hansen has been with the most prominent producers and in every form of picture features, serials and comedies. She is at present appearing in the Selig serial, "The Lost City," and one of her recent successes was in support of Bert Lytell in "Lombardi, Ltd."

Undersea Feature Bought by Republic Corporation

Announcement is made by Mr. Briton N. Busch, president of the Republic Distributing Corporation, that they have purchased the world rights to "The Girl of the Sea," the Williamson under the sea feature and will distribute it through their twenty-two branch exchanges in January.

Metro Plans Superb Production

Ibanez' "The Four Horsemen," Procured Under Heavy Bidding, to Have All Star Cast

Vincente Blasco Ibanez, whose "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" is to be filmed by Screen Classics

METRO Pictures Corporation is in the midst of tremendous activity, the immediate objective of which is to put on the screen a picturization of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by Vincente Blasco Ibanez, that will be in keeping with the fame of this celebrated novel which critics universally have proclaimed the literary sensation of the day in every corner of the globe where the printed page is read. "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" has reached its 125th edition, so wonderful is its popularity.

So elated is the Metro organization over the coup by which it acquired "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" in the face of competitive bidding by virtually every other important producing company in the motion picture industry, that Metro officials purpose to make a screen production of the brilliant novel that will set new standards of artistry and sumptuousness. This effort has an added incentive from the fact that Metro bought "The Four Horsemen" in response to an insistent demand by exhibitors.

As the initial step in getting this gigantic production under way, June Mathias, head of the Screen Classics, Inc., scenario staff, was hurriedly summoned to New York from the Metro studios in Hollywood, Calif., to undertake at once the screen adaptation and scenariozation of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

Prior to his departure on his speaking tour, which takes in Boston, Canton, O., Pittsburgh, Chicago, and other large cities of the east and middle west as well as Toronto and Ottawa in Canada, the Spanish novelist held several conferences with Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation and Screen Classics, Inc., in which he gave some of his views on how "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" should be picturized.

These suggestions by the author Mr. Rowland imparted to Miss Mathias upon her arrival in the metropolis.

Meanwhile Senor Ibanez has promised to make a special trip to the Pacific Coast in time to be present at the beginning of camera work on the picturization of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." He will give the production the benefit of his personal touch and suggestions as to costuming, characterization and the composition of the settings. Metro feels that the presence of the distinguished author on the studio "lot" during the translation of his astounding work of fiction to the silent drama will impart the ultimate word of authenticity.

According to Metro's present plans, production work on "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" will be started in mid-January, under the personal supervision of Director General Maxwell Karger, co-operating with the visiting author.

F. P. Lasky's Current Releases

"Victory," "An Adventure in Hearts," and "More Deadly Than the Male" Usher in Month of December

THE month of December is ushered in by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation with the release, on the 7th, of three Paramount-Artcraft subjects, namely, Maurice Tourneur's special production, "Victory," Robert Warwick in "An Adventure in Hearts," and Ethel Clayton in "More Deadly Than the Male."

Shown at the Rialto Theatre, New York, during the week of November 30th, "Victory," the newest product of Tourneur, ran in competition with "Male and Female," the attraction at the Rivoli, and vied with the De Mille picture in the matter of patronage. Jack Holt plays the leading male role and opposite him is seen Seena Owen. Lon Chaney as Ricardo, Wallace Beery as Schomberg and Bull Montana as Pedro perform creditably.

Robert Warwick's picture, "An Adventure in Hearts," is based on Anthony Hope's novel, "Captain Dieppe." Helene Chadwick is Major Warwick's leading woman, and the supporting cast includes Winifred Greenwood, Juan de la Cruz, Walter Long and Howard Gaye. James Cruze directed from a scenario by Elmer Harris.

"More Deadly Than the Male," is an adaptation of Joseph Collomb's story, "The Female of the Species," and Julia Crawford Ivers was responsible for the scenario. Robert G. Vignola was the director. Ethel Clayton is the star. Edward Hoxen is Miss Clayton's leading man, and the support includes Herbert Heyes, Hal Cooley and Peggy Pearce.

More than 150 scenes for Elaine Hammerstein's latest Selznick picture, "The Woman Game," will be made in the south, according to Director William P. S. Earle, who is now in Florida with members of the company, Miss Hammerstein, Jere Austin, and Cameraman Wagner.

"Cliques Will Be Downed"-Levy

Louisville Man Elaborates on the Cooperative Plan of First National Circuit

DECLARING that within a few days many exhibitors in Kentucky and Tennessee will be permanently affiliated with the new exhibitor-cooperative plan of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Colonel Fred Levy of Louisville, owner of the Circuit's franchise for the two Southern states, elaborates, in a statement this week, on First National's official announcement that it is waging a war to the finish with monopolistic Wall Street cliques for the preservation and future prosperity of independent exhibitor interests, and reveals something of the real scope and force of the actual exhibitor strength that is being contributed to it, in unison with First National, by theatre owners throughout the country.

"The most important benefit of the moment to every exhibitor who has, or is, joining us in the new First National plan," declared Colonel Levy upon his return to Louisville from a conference with members of the Exhibitors' Defense Committee of the Circuit in Indianapolis last week, "is that each of them will have an absolutely impregnable shield of protection provided against the threatened invasion of their territory by the so-called producer-distributor-exhibitor film factions which are depending upon Wall Street interests to finance this latest attempt at monopoly.

"Under the new First National plan the small exhibitor is surrounded by the same protective forces as those that provide safety from invasion and unfair competitive tactics by producer-distributor-exhibitor interests for the large theatre owners.

"The basic premise or theory upon which rests the bulwark and structure of the new and greater First National plan is that every exhibitor in the motion picture industry, whether he is the owner of a small country theatre, or the owner of a large circuit, is entitled and justly privileged to continue in business without being compelled to endure the competitive blows of the very hands into which he has paid his rental money, month in and month out. Next to the public the exhibitors have made this industry possible. They are deserving of the right to continue in it, as exhibitors, and to independence in action, decision and business conduct.

"I regard this new plan as the greatest step forward the film industry ever has taken. My enthusiasm over it is shared in, fully, by Mr. Lee L. Goldberg, my associate in the First National franchise in Kentucky and Tennessee, and many of the most prominent and alert exhibitors in this territory. Within a few days I will be at liberty to announce the names and theatre holdings of the exhibitors who are now joining hands in establishing, in this territory, an aggregate of theatre strength that will put an entirely different complexion on the plans of the monopoly seekers who have been threatening them with all manner of dire things if they did not either sign long term service contracts, sell out at prices ridiculously low, or submit to a form of competition which was predicted to involve price cutting at the box office.

Scenic Beauty Feature of Film

"Blindness of Youth" Said to Rival Any Offering in Point of Its Splendor of Settings

A PICTURE that will equal for beautiful scenery the most wonderful that the regular scenics have to offer is claimed for Murray W. Carsson's special feature production, "The Blindness of Youth."

The general manager of Foundation Film Corporation fortifies his assertion by a display of photographs. The initial offering of this company is expected to blaze the trail for their forthcoming productions, and all their pictures will be sold to territorial buyers and distributed solely on the state rights basis.

"The Blindness of Youth" shows the pretty girl and her chaperon spending a vacation at a picturesque villa in the mountains of Switzerland. Her ardent suitor is expected from New York and the girl is yet undecided as to whether she loves him enough to accept him.

It is then that she sees the youth at the Magic Pool. The boy is the son of a hermit who tells fortunes and when the old man is invited to the villa to tell the girl's fortune he discovers that his son is in love with the young girl and fears that this love will be fruitless.

From then on this photoplay is described as one of the most gripping romance and is said to possess a novelty that for sheer charm will captivate any audience.

"The Blindness of Youth" is based upon the story by M. L. Herbier, and Mr. Garsson declares that the cast is composed of well-known screen artists of perfect types instead of depending on the work of a single star.

"Maggie," from Stage Play, for Mabel Normand

Mabel Normand, Goldwyn's star comedienne, will make her next picture in New York under the direction of Victor L. Schertzinger, who directed "Jinx," "Pinto" and other productions presenting the inimitable little actress. The vehicle selected for Miss Normand, according to the announcement received from the Goldwyn offices, is "Maggie," a stage play by Edward Peple, author of "A Pair of Sixes" and a number of other successes. "Maggie" met with popular favor when it was staged in Canada a number of years ago.

Director Schertzinger is now on his way from Culver City to New York, accompanied by Assistant Director Joe Delfino, Cameraman George Webber and Cullen Landis and Walter Hiers, who are cast for important roles in the production.

Commencing Nov. 23, Keystone Reissues Through Triangle

A series of Mack Sennett Keystone comedies, have been recreated by Triangle and will be released through the Keystone Triangle Exchanges commencing November 23d. It is said that the pictures have been re-edited, retitled and attractive art titles inserted. New posters have already been sent to all the Exchanges. Mabel Normand, "Fatty" Arbuckle, Mack Swain, Mack Sennett, Chester Conklin, Ford Sterling and many others whose name spell laughter to millions will again serve to fill moving picture theatres, according to reports.

It is announced that a two-reel Keystone will be released every other week and a single reel comedy will be shown on alternating weeks.

Reproduces Century Roof for Production

The Century theatre roof has been reproduced for a scene in the coming J. Parker Reed's production sets, and the action on this setting was photographed this week. More than one thousand people were assembled on the big stage when the setting was photographed, and all of them took part in the scene in support of Louise Glaum, the star. Set is an original story by C. Gardner Sullivan, and the production is being directed by Fred Niblo. At the studio it is said to be the most ambitious role of Miss Glaum's screen career.

Included in the great number of people used in the Century theatre roof scene was a bevy of dancers from the Denishawn School, conducted by Ted Shawn and Ruth St. Denis. The costumes used in their dance were of Grecian design.

New Sennett Production of Elaborate Proportions

Mack Sennett has practically completed his new multiple-reel comedy production, which is said by those who have seen it run off in the projection room to be among the most novel feature pictures ever made by Mr. Sennett. The picture, which is primarily a comedy of the Sennett type, is said to be different from all other laugh-making pictures, in that there is a deep human interest, as well as mirth-making burlesque.

All of the Sennett fun makers appear in the picture, and in addition to the all-star cast, Teddy, the dog with the human brain, Pepper, the cat comedian, the Sennett cows, geese, pigs and other animals take prominent parts.

Arizona's Olden Trails in Prizma Color Picture

Prizma Natural Color Pictures, in reaching out to the far ends of the earth for wonderful scenes showing Nature's marvels, have made them an essential to successful motion picture houses. Its latest release is "The Apache Trail of Arizona," which is one of the oldest travelled routes of this continent.

Alice Joyce is star in "The Vengeance of Durand" a Vitagraph release.

Chaplin's "Carmen" Booked in Pittsburg and Chicago

"A Burlesque on Carmen," a feature Chaplin comedy being distributed by Victor Kremer on a state right basis, will have its premier shortly in Chicago and Pittsburgh.

L. Schindler, of the Mickey Film Corporation, Chicago, will present "A Burlesque on Carmen" in conjunction with the elaborate stage presentation conceived by Victor Kremer at the Rialto theatre, Chicago, beginning January 5. Following an engagement of a week at this house, it is planned to move this entire production to McVickers in the same city for a run.

Many inquiries have been received at the Kremer offices from first run exhibitors relative to "A Burlesque on Carmen" and it is believed that this Chaplin production, because of its feature length and the new form in which it is being presented, will prove one of the most popular attractions for the leading theatres of the country in which the million dollar comedian has ever appeared.

Walter E. Greene Enters Independent Field

Walter E. Greene, who recently resigned as vice-president, director and managing director of the Department of Distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has returned from the West Coast, where he spent a month perfecting some individual plans.

Upon his arrival in New York Mr. Greene was emphatic in his statement that he was not affiliated with, influenced or controlled by any other interests in the motion picture industry, and that he was establishing himself independently in the independent field. He was particularly enthusiastic about the possibilities of the independent market, and stated that from the information he has gathered from hundreds of the largest exhibitors throughout the country with whom he came in contact on this trip, that the future progress of the industry lay absolutely in the hands of the independent producers and independent distributors.

New Fox Home Opens Shortly

Work About Completed on Structure Said to Be Greatest Film City Under One Roof

WORK on the new administration, laboratory and studio building which William Fox has erected at Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth streets and Tenth avenue, New York City, has gone forward so rapidly that occupancy some time in January is expected. The brick-work is entirely completed, concrete floors having been laid, windows placed and steam pipes and wire conduits installed. The huge roof is in place, and all that remains is to put the interior into condition for the functioning of the numerous branches of the great industry the building is to house.

The giant structure, "a motion picture city two minutes from Broadway," is a striking testimonial to the might of motion pictures and the achievements of Fox Film Corporation. Its cost is $2,500,000, its floor area amounts to four acres, nearly 5,000 persons can work within its four walls, and 3,000,000 feet of film can be turned out every week. These figures make the new Fox plant the largest film establishment in the world under one roof, it is claimed.

Direct communication with Fox branch offices on this continent and abroad will be provided by a telegraph office in the building having connection with all telegraph and cable stations.

An outstanding feature of the plant is the element of safety for lives and property in event of an emergency. Before the building was begun, a conference was held with several fire experts, at which time suggestions were made as to means for minimizing fire hazards in motion picture plants. All of the ideas were embodied in the plans, in addition to others originated by Mr. Fox himself. The structure is fireproof throughout, the walls being of brick and the main construction of steel and concrete. Fire walls extend through the building from basement to roof, so that any section may be cut off immediately. Exits are so plentiful that no person will be at any time more than 100 feet from a means of egress to the street.

Ramps extend from Fifty-sixth street to each of the three floors, which will permit all the occupants of the building to reach the street within a minute. These incline ways are wide enough to take care of trucks, which can be driven to any floor to unload supplies or scenery for the studios.

Another innovation lies in the large air conditioning plant that will supply washed air and also insure uniformity of temperature during the entire year. Although the thermometer on Tenth avenue may register 98 degrees in the shade, the temperature in Fox offices will be 68 to 70 degrees, which will be the temperature also if street thermometers register zero.

Would Play Up the Short Subjects

Mack Sennett Says Exhibitor Loses by Not Exploiting Short-Reeler Having All Values of Feature

MACK SENNETT, in an interview given out last week, said: "I am very much pleased at the reports I am receiving from all over the country from exhibitors who are getting away from the old policy of featuring long pictures, regardless of their value, and who, on trying out the featuring of short subjects, such as the Mack Sennett comedies, strictly on their merit and not on their reel length, are making the biggest profits in the history of their theatres. I consider this to be the most important development of the year in pictures, especially from the exhibitors' standpoint.

"Unfortunately for the exhibitor and the public and the producer, it has too long been the policy of exhibitors to base their advertising, billing, lobby displays on the longest picture they were showing, and the public was influenced by this policy. As a result of this, short comedies, which had cost thousands of dollars to make, and had all the elements of human interest that a dramatic picture had and sometimes more, were put on as fillers. Quantity, not quality, was the exhibitors' motto.

"During the past few months I have persuaded a number of leading live-wire exhibitors to try out the quality, regardless of length plan, and that it was a sure-fire success is shown by the reports I have received from such theatres as Grauman's Million-Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles; Portola Theatre, San Francisco; Circle, Indianapolis; Rialto and Strand, New York, and many others, where my comedies were made the feature of their programs with record-breaking box-office receipts."

Helen Weer and Henry G. Sell in an intense moment in The Film's Market's "House Without Children."

Wyndham Standing has been engaged by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation for the leading role in the Goldwyn Eminent Authors Production of Basil King's "Earthbound," which is to be made at the Culver City Studios under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter.

Industry Saddened by Tragedy

Further Details of Accident in Africa Costing Lives of Two Universal Men Received

THE entire motion picture world as well as the general public throughout the United States, learned with regret of the death of the well known film actor, William Stowell, and Dr. Joseph R. Armstrong, well known resident of Los Angeles, who were killed in a train wreck near Elizabethville, Belgian Congo, South Africa, as briefly told last week. Mr. Stowell's neck was broken and he died thirty hours afterwards. Dr. Armstrong died six hours after the accident from concussion of the brain. Three other members of the Expedition sent to Africa by the Smithsonian Institute in connection with Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the purpose of getting educational and travel pictures, were injured.

This message was received by Carl Laemmle, Universal's president, from the United Press, the N. E. A. and a wire from Universal City, Calif. The entire Universal staff in California and New York were shocked beyond words.

The injured, according to the cable report are, Pliny Horne, cameraman, cut and body bruises; Henry Kohler, laboratory expert, body injuries, reported not serious; and Edward M. Thierry, N. E. A. correspondent, head lacerations and severe shock.

William Stowell was born in Boston, Mass., and was 38 years old. His correct name was William H. Stowell Farr, but he has been known as William Stowell since entering motion pictures, almost nine years ago. He was the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Daniel T. Farr. Mr. Stowell was with the Selig Company four and one-half years, the American Company one and one-half years and up to his death had been with Universal more than two and one-half years as leading man. He is survived by an aunt whose present address is unknown.

Dr. Joseph R. Armstrong was born in Binghamton, New York and was a graduate of the University of the City of New York. He was forty-eight years old and for several years had lived at 6122 Selma Avenue, Los Angeles.

Upon receiving the news of the accident, Carl Laemmle, Universal's president, issued the following statement:

"To make any expression upon the death of two such men as William Stowell and Dr. Jos. R. Armstrong, while serving our Company, is most difficult. It is beyond the power of human expression in words to say more than that I was shocked and deeply grieved."

"Sagebrusher" Draws Attention

Many Pre-release Showings Listed for Hampton's Second Great Author's Production

EXHIBITOR interest in Benjamin B. Hampton's second Great Authors production, "The Sagebrusher," by Emerson Hough, may be likened to the enthusiasm shown by America's biggest picture showmen earlier in the year when Mr. Hampton's two previous author-supervised W. W. Hodkinson releases, "The Westerners," by Stewart Edward White and Zane Grey's "Desert Gold" were given introductory screening the country over. Pre-release showings of "The Sagebrusher" will be held in a score of the large cities.

A carefully-made production of a well known novel, with incident and characters reproducing faithfully the work of the author, played by an all-star cast and staged in picturesque scenery, "The Sagebrusher" is said to have the quality of reality, humanness and heart throbs such as exhibitors and the picture-going public have learned to expect in a photoplay made by Benjamin B. Hampton, that peerless producer of "best sellers" in pictures.

A noteworthy cast, including Marguerite de la Motte, Roy Stewart, Noah Beery, Arthur Morrison, Betty Brice and other accomplished actors, portray the roles of Mr. Hough's fiction characters. Each part is played to its full value and the book has been translated to the silent stage medium complete, a technically perfect photodrama, produced with the assistance of the author, who was in constant association with Mr. Hampton during all the five months of production work, and directed by Edward Sloman, who also held the reins in the production of "The Westerners," Mr. Hampton's first Great Authors picture.

Atlas Film to Produce McGrath Novel

Harold Macgrath's novel, "The Place of Honeymoons," for which several of the most prominent producers have been bidding, has been purchased by the Atlas Film Corporation, and will be exploited by the Pioneer both on the State right market and through the Pioneer co-operative exchanges.

The background of the story is laid in New York, Paris, London and on the shores of the beautiful Lake Como in Italy. The plot of this story, like that of all the Macgrath novels, is highly romantic, presenting numerous opportunities for startling scenic and dramatic effects.

The studio and executive headquarters of the Atlas Film Corporation is located at Newton, Massachusetts. Its list of officers is headed by Frank J. Howard, who holds the position of president. L. E. Daddun is vice-president and general manager, while Herbert L. McClearn is treasurer. Miss Ida Harrison, who is acting as general representative, has been in New York for the past few weeks carrying on the negotiations with the Pioneer, and is now busily engaged in casting for "The Place of Honeymoons."

Capital to Increase Production

Improved Studio Facilities Will Permit of Added Lines of Comedies and Current Events

THE CAPITAL FILM COMPANY is very shortly going into increased production.

This was one of the moves decided upon during the Hollywood visit of President S. L. Barnhard from the home offices of the company at Chicago. Mr. Barnhard has just returned East after a visit of two weeks, during which time he was in daily conference with Carl H. Pafenbach, manager of the Capital Studio in Hollywood, and some of the directors of the company.

Since last spring Capital has been producing two-reel dramas featuring Neal Hart, Al Jennings and Helen Gibson. The schedule of output has been twenty-four releases a year with each star, but this schedule has been so far exceeded, due to efficiency methods at the studio, that Manager Pafenbach was able to show three or four pictures ahead with each star. He emphasized, however, the scarcity of stories suitable for production.

"The usual sort of stories submitted for two-reel pictures will not serve our purpose at all," said Mr. Pafenbach. "We are making pictures that are just as truly 'feature pictures' as if they consisted of five reels instead of two. For that reason, our stories must have plot, characterization and consistency. They are hard to get."

On account of the scarcity of scripts, and because of the advanced progress made on production schedule, it was decided to close the studio for at least two weeks, during which a vigorous campaign for Western stories and railroad stories will be maintained.

Plans were also formulated for improved studio facilities so that a line of two-reel comedies and one-reel current events can be added after the first of the year. It is also quite likely that Capital will enter the field of special productions running five and six reels in length, although this will not affect the output of the high grade two-reel dramas on which Capital's reputation has been built up.

These are now being distributed in every exchange center in the country, and are rivalling in popularity the famous old two-reel dramas put out by Biograph. Capital plans to have four or five companies producing two-reel dramas by next spring. These short-length subjects enable the exhibitor to diversify his program by showing the always popular news reels, the comedies, the travelogues and at the same time to preserve the balance of his offering by a two-reel dramatic subject—all within the usual hour-and-a-half time limit. Such diversification would be manifestly impossible except in reel drama.

Capital has been occupying the old Metro studio at 1025 Lillian Way, Hollywood, which was placed under lease last spring.

So popular have its short dramas become that only last week the company received a proposition from a well known distributor for world rights on Capital's entire output.

Arrow to Market a New Serial

"The Fatal Sign" in Fifteen Episodes Features Claire Anderson and Harry Carter

DR. W. E. SCHALLENBERGER, president of Arrow Film Corporation, announces that Arrow will market the new Stuart Payton Serial, "The Fatal Sign." Arrow will place this serial on the state rights market, handling the sales for United States and Canada.

The serial is in fifteen episodes of two reels each and was written, scenarioized and directed by Stuart Payton, one of the first director-producers to publish a serial drama.

Director Payton's reputation as a serial director, dates back to the early days when Universal first placed its serial productions on the market. He was at one time scenario editor for Universal and during his early career as a director-producer, directed such well known productions as "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," "Peace At Any Price," "Like Wild Fire," "The Green Seal," "Beloved Jim" and the serial "The Grey Ghost."

In Mr. Payton's latest serial production, "The Fatal Sign," Claire Anderson and Harry Carter have the future parts and included in the cast are such well known serial actors as Joe Girard, Boyd Irwin and Lee Maloney. Mr. Payton has taken for his theme the exploits of a noted band of criminals whose reputation for notorious crime equals that of the famous Camorra gang that for many years terrorized the cities of Europe.

Dr. Schallenberger reports that already requests from state-right buyers have reached his office for territory on this serial and he expects a long list of advance sales. Prints of the first ten episodes are now available and Arrow Film expects to have the remaining five ready for release soon.

"Aphrodite" Rights Go to F. P.-Lasky

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that it has purchased through the French Author's Society the World's motion picture rights to "Aphrodite," the novel by Pierre Louys, as well as Pierre Frondaie's dramatic version of the book, upon which the Comstock & Gest spectacle at the Century theatre is based.

It is expected that "Aphrodite" will be placed in production in the near future, thus bringing to the screen a work that already has created an immense sensation.

The novel by Pierre Louys and Frondaie's dramatic version, which was adapted in English for American presentation at the Century theatre, have no connection, it is declared, with another novel of the same name published in this country by Small, Maynard & Co., of Boston.

Will Make Films of Educational Interest for F. P.-Lasky Vanderbilt Group Film

TO take motion pictures of geographical and botanical interest, for exhibition in schools and other educational institutions, the Non-Fiction Film Production Department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation last week sent to Samoa, in the South Pacific, one of the most ambitious expeditions ever undertaken by a motion picture company in search of new and interesting film material. The expedition, which is made up of a number of Boston scientists and financial men, sailed from Marblehead, Mass., in the 125-foot power yacht Ajax, and will probably be four months in reaching its destination in the South Seas—a voyage of 15,000 miles.

The party will make the entire trip in the Ajax, an adventure which admittedly is full of peril for the men aboard. The vessel will stop at Bermuda, Jamaica and then head westward to the Panama Canal, where pictures will be taken of the various activities in the Canal Zone. After going through the canal, the Ajax will head for Samoa, an unbroken voyage of several thousand miles.

Alvin Knechtel, cameraman for the Non-Fiction Film Production Department of Famous Players-Lasky, will make the picture under the direction of E. B. Badger, a Boston financier, who for years has been prominent in South Sea commercial affairs, and Arthur B. Tilton, a prominent Harvard man.

Photographed at great peril and after innumerable hardships, the first of the pictures taken on the Paramount-Vanderbilt Expedition into an unexplored region of the Canadian Rockies, is now in readiness and will be released December 21 as part of the Paramount Magazine. The expedition, which was gone three months and returned only recently, was headed by Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., son of Brigadier-General Cornelius Vanderbilt, and included in its personnel several wealthy New York sportsmen.

"In the Canadian Wilds" is the title of the first of the Vanderbilt pictures, which was made in a section south of Banff, in British Alberta, shortly after young Vanderbilt has been made an honorary chief of the famous Stoney tribe of Indians.

J. Lawrence Weber and Selznick

Producing Organization Formed by the Two; Edith Hallor to Star in Six Productions

LEWIS J. SELZNICK and L. Lawrence Weber have joined hands in the formation of a new producing organization under the name of Weber Productions, Inc., it was announced from the Selznick offices this week. Mr. Selznick is treasurer of the new company, with L. Lawrence Weber, one of the most prominent influences in theatrical and motion picture circles, as president.

Edith Hallor, former prima donna of Ziegfeld's "Follies," the portrayer of Intoxication in the stage success, "Experience," and the star of the Morris, Comstock & Gest production, "Leave It to Jane," has been placed under a long term contract to star in six pictures a year. The first of the Edith Hallor vehicles is "Children of Destiny," by Sydney Rosenfeld, adapted to the screen by Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady. George Irving has been engaged to direct.

Production on "Children of Destiny" began at the Peerless Studios in Fort Lee on Monday of this week, under the personal supervision of Bobbie North.

In "Children of Destiny" Miss Hallor departs from the commonplace and sets a precedent in motion pictures by playing a triple role. Seen first as a young mother, next as an aged mother and finally as the young and beautiful daughter, Miss Hallor is expected to establish herself as a screen star of real merit and appeal.

Weber Productions, Inc., also announces that another famous star will be placed under contract in the near future to appear in a series of six productions. The most painstaking efforts will be put forth to provide exhibitors and the public with a new standard in cinema excellence.

Intensive publicity and exploitation in accordance with the policies of Lewis J. Selznick will precede and trail all releases by the new organization. "It pleases me greatly to make these connections with Mr. Weber," said Mr. Selznick in announcing the association. "We have been friends and pals for many years, and now we are partners in an alliance that will result most satisfactorily for all concerned."

Handling United Theatre Films

Pearce Films Will Distribute Such Offerings in the South, Starting on December 15

IT will be good news for exhibitors located in what is known as the New Orleans territory, who have been anxious to show United Picture Theatres of America attractions that bookings can now be made through Pearce Films.

United has received countless inquiries from exhibitors in the New Orleans district who have been patiently awaiting the opportunity to make booking contracts on their features. These exhibitors are now happy.

Pearce Films is a big concern, one of the best known in the South as well as one of the oldest, and enjoys a reputation of honesty and good service. The company is located at 608 Canal street, New Orleans, La. It will distribute United pictures to theatres in Louisiana, Mississippi, the Western portion of Alabama, the counties of Escambia, Santa Rosa, Oskaloosa, Walton, Washington and Bay in Florida and in the Eastern section of Arkansas.

Pearce Films will begin releasing United features on December 15th, when "Her Code of Honor," starring Florence Reed, the screen's greatest emotional star, will be available for the theatre men of the above territories. Following this at two-week intervals, all the United Picture Theatres of America features will be released, a photodrama starring Dustin Farnum being the second, then a Kitty Gordon feature—the stars alternating.

The agreement whereby United features will be handled in the New Orleans territory by Pearce Films was recently made by Mr. J. A. Berst, president of United Picture Theatres of America. Through it United attractions are guaranteed a much greater vogue in the South and will satisfy the many patrons of motion picture theatres located there who have written to United asking where the Florence Reed, Dustin Farnum and Kitty Gordon pictures could be seen. The handling of the features by Pearce Films will permit of their being shown in any theatre located in the territory served by the Pearce people.

First Product as Producer-Star

Taylor Holmes Completes "Nothing But the Truth" First Release Distributed by Metro

TAYLOR Holmes has finished the camera work on the screen adaptation of the highly successful stage farce, "Nothing But The Truth," in which he is to star, and has begun the cutting and assembling of the picture that represents the initial production of Taylor Holmes Productions, Inc., to be distributed exclusively by Metro. "Nothing But The Truth" is the first of the three stage plays to find their way to the screen under the auspices of Mr. Holmes and Metro, the others begin, as recently announced, "The Very Idea" and "Nothing But Lies."

The announcement regarding "Nothing But The Truth" is of special interest inasmuch as it marks the entry of Taylor Holmes into the producing field with a vehicle that is ideally suited in his farcical capabilities. As a novel and then as a play, "Nothing But the Truth" was first read and then seen by thousands when William Collier starred in the mirth provoking farce on Broadway. The popularity of Taylor Holmes as a farceur of rare ability is acknowledged everywhere pictures are shown, and his appearance in the famous comedy will be awaited with interest by his legion of screen admirers

In casting about for the best possible avenue of distribution for the screen productions of the company that bears his name, Mr. Holmes gave the matter long and serious consideration. He wished to find a means of distribution that would be absolutely unlimited in scope of operation, and which would, moreover, carry with it the prestige of an established and high-class name. After due deliberation of the contending parties who were bidding for the distribution of his pictures, Mr. Holmes chose Metro.

The release date of "Nothing But the Truth" will be announced shortly by Metro, following which production will get under way on the second of the Taylor Holmes Productions, Inc., pictures to be distributed by Metro Pictures Corporation.

Holubar and Phillips Working on "Ambition"

Universal announces that in "Ambition" the public will again be enabled to see the fruits of the combined efforts of Allen Holubar, the director, and Dorothy Phillips, the star, the same co-workers who were responsile for the success of "The Heart of Humanity" and "The Right to Happiness." Universal claims that in this combination there is to be found the highest advantages that inevitably follow when mutual respect and reliance obtain between director and artist. To support this strong combination in the production of the coming feature, Universal promises every resource of its casting and technical departments.

Big Vehicles Planned

A special staff of scenario experts are hard at work looking over stories for Mae Marsh and "Chic" Sale, the latest acquisition to the Robertson-Cole list of stars. Miss Marsh has arrived in California and is in daily consultation at the Gasnier Studio while "Chic" is making his last swing around the country before making his debut into screenland. Irving Cobb, the famous author, will write several stories around the characters best played by Sale and a director of international repute will be in charge of the film.

Strong Picture Boom in Chicago

Realart Manager Reports Increasing Bookings; Binney Picture Expected to Score Heavily

MOTION pictures are booming in Chicago, according to H. W. Willard, manager for Realart Pictures Corporation in that city, who paid a flying visit to the new home offices last week.

Mr. Willard declares that the Picture outlook has never been better in his territory, and that the vast strides in the motion picture industry in the middle and extreme West are taking definite shape in the erection of motion picture palaces for the adequate housing of the newer and better products.

There is a perceptible change in the attitude of Western business and professional people toward the screen, in the opinion of Mr. Willard. This has come about through the earnestness of producers in perfecting the photoplay, and because of the attitude of exhibitors who feel that no edifice is too fine to house the creation of modern stars and directors.

Among the outstanding examples of this tendency in Chicago, are the present construction by Messrs. Balaban and Katz of a two-and-a-half million dollar theatre at State and Lake streets, Chicago, to be known as the Capitol, and the erection of a large house by Ascher Brothers in the same city.

Mr. Willard reports the presence of Constance Binney, one of the Realart luminaries, in this city with her stake play, "39 East." According to the Chicago manager, the star is not only blazing a name for herself in the Illinois metropolis, but is making the first bow for Realart Pictures Corporation with whom she is being associated in all press reports. In the opinion of Mr. Willard, Chicagoans will look forward to the showing next week of Miss Binney's first Realart production, "Erstwhile Susan" when it goes on at the Playhouse.

Mr. Willard says, in addition, that Chicago will soon see "Soldiers of Fortune," the Realart feature which has proved such a box-office sensation in Washington, New York and other large cities where it was shown. In advance of the presentation of this photoplay the exhibitors are arranging for many large exploitation stunts, including a parade of the 108th Sanitary Train, and a special showing of the Richard Harding Davis Photoplay at the Hamilton Club, a prominent social organization.

"Male and Female" Scores Hit

Famous Players-Lasky Reports That Records Topple Everywhere That Picture Is Being Exhibited

THE following report has been received from the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in connection with the marked successes of the first run performance of "Male and Female."

"A total of 54,665 paid admissions is the record established by Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female" during its engagement at the Rivoli theatre, New York. This, acording to the Rivoli management, breaks all previous week's records by nearly ten thousand, and involves a new Sunday record of 9,172, a new week-day record of 7,354, established Monday, and a new evening's record, set up Thanksgiving night.

"Transferred to the Rialto, the production has been playing virtually to capacity throughout the present week, and it is quite possible that a new week's attendance record will be set up at that house also."

Nor does the record-smashing career of "Male and Female" seem to terminate with the New York achievement, for in the dozen or more, first-run cities where it has been shown it is reported by the Famous Players-Lasky report to have broken either the single day or week's record.

Some of the theatres at which the picture has been shown and which have reported very favorably on the production are: The Imperial, San Francisco; Park theatre, Boston; the Garden, Washington; the Rialto and the Princess, Denver; the Parkway and New Wizard, Baltimore; the Broadway Strand, Detroit.

Love Letters? Yes, Lew Cody Gets a Batch

That Robertson-Cole's special, "The Be loved Cheater," is widely known is bes evidenced by the fact that more than 2,00 love letters have been written to Le Cody, the star, during the past two week The letters bear the post mark from a sections of the country and people in a walks of life are striving to win some o the prizes for the best love letter writte to the star.

Although Robertson-Cole made the an nouncement in the trade papers severa weeks ago and in the January issue of th fan magazines, the letters are pouring int the New York headquarters in larger num bers than anticipated. Judges for the con test will be announced later.

Fairbanks Film Has True to Life Basis

WITH the presentation of his latest United Artists production, "When the Clouds Roll By," Douglas Fairbanks has taken a chapter of his life as a means for providing the theme for what is declared to be the best picture ever offered by the smiling athletic star.

The play is one built up on superstition, the leading role falling to an average young American. The theory as to whether or not there is any foundation for the belief that a human destiny may be guided by means of mental suggestion is placed to a test and it is here that the life of the star enters into the screen discussion.

While in his late 'teens Fairbanks was very superstitious, so much so that his life was guided by the foolish whims which confronted him. Whatever success he had or what ever reverses, he attributed to some form of mythical magic.

Looking back now to the years of the past the star realizes the folly of it all and states that he is happy he discovered his sense of humor in time to destroy the mental germs which had been implanted by the one with the fantastic ideas.

Anita Stewart Begins on New First National Film

The Louis B. Mayer's studios in Los Angeles report satisfactory progress in the filming of Anita Stewart's new First National attraction, "The Fighting Shepherdess."

Edward Jose is directing the production, and is very enthusiastic about the story which is from Caroline Lockhart's famous novel of the same name.

Supporting Miss Stewart in the cast are such well-known screen artists as Noah Beery, Wallace MacDonald, Walter Long and Eugenie Besserer.

Tower Film Selling State Rights on a Chaplin

Tower Film Corporation announces that they now have ready for release and are selling state rights on the second single-reel Charlie Chaplin special, "Lord Helpus," formerly entitled "Cruel, Cruel Love." This is to follow "Some Nerve," the first of a series of single-reel Charlie Chaplin productions. A special press sheet for exhibitors on "Lord Helpus" is now in preparation, illustrating the full line of posters, lobby display photos, newspaper cuts and press stories for this Charlie Chaplin special.

Foreign Rights to Hank Mann Comics Sold

All territory in the United States, foreign rights and Canadian rights have been sold for the new series of two-reel comedies featuring Hank Mann, according to word received this week by Morris R. Schlank, producer, from headquarters of his company in New York. The Hank Mann comedies are being marketed on the state rights basis by Arrow.

Larry Semon, who has renewed his Vitagraph contract

All Semon Comedies to Be Shown in Capitol

Through a contract just made by Vitagraph and the Capitol theatre, all the Larry Semon comedies for the next year will be shown at Broadway's biggest and newest theatre—the largest theatre in the world presenting motion pictures. The action of the management of the Capitol in signing a standard star series contract for the Semon comedies follows closely upon two important events in the career of these comedies—the announcement by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, that the comedian had entered into a new contract whereby Vitagraph would expend $3,600,000 on the Semon comedies during the next year and the showing of "The Head Waiter" at the Capitol two weeks ago.

Pearl White Leads in Popularity Contest

As an evidence of the position which its recently acquired star occupies in the South American field, Fox Film Corporation reports the fact that Pearl White, who is about to start her first picture under the William Fox banner, has held and still is holding with a good lead the first position among women stars of the screen throughout the republic of Chile.

This statement is based upon the popularity contest now being held under the supervision of the Cinematographica Weekly, which publishes in each issue the standing of the leading contestants according to the votes forwarded from the various sections of Chile.

Desmond's First Pathe Appearance Dec. 21

Pathe announces Jesse D. Hampton's latest production starring William Desmond, "The Prince and Betty," scheduled for release December 21st. It is described as a romantic comedy-drama.

"The Prince and Betty" is a picturization of Pelham Grenville Wodehouse's novel of the same name, and is said to contain all the elements of humor and adventure which are in his much-read Saturday Evening Post stories.

English Actor Engaged for Selznick Play

Lewis J. Selznick recently engaged Cyril Chadwick, the prominent English actor, for an important role in "Bucking the Tiger," the melodrama by Achmed Abdullah and May Tully with which Mr. Selznick will make his debut as a legitimate producer on Broadway the first week in January.

Mr. Chadwick made a reputation in England and America as a brilliant comedian of the speaking stage, but in "His Wife's Money," Eugene O'Brien's latest Selznick picture, he plays a particularly sophisticated and detestable "heavy."

Before joining the Selznick forces, Mr. Chadwick appeared in such well-known pictures as "The Matinee Idol," "Mrs. Dane's Defense," and "On the Quiet." In the filming of his last picture he sustained a broken leg and retired for a protracted period of convalescence.

Hirsh Owns World's Rights to the Six-Reel Drama, "Blind Love"

An announcement of special interest to exhibitors and state rights buyers comes from President Nathan Hirsh of the Aywon Film Corporation. Mr. Hirsh, according to reports, has just bought the world's rights to the big six-reel feature production, "Blind Love," a photodrama said to be of the greatest appeal.

The star of "Blind Love" is Lucy Cotton, who has built up an enviable name for herself on both stage and screen.

Others in the supporting cast include George La Guere, Thurlow Bergen, Frank O'Connor, Morgan Coman and Lillian Bacon.

"Jinx" in Big Demand for Special Shows

Reports received during the past week from the twenty-two exchanges of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, where Mabel Normand in "Jinx" has been shown to exhibitors, indicate that this classic of the big top is one of the greatest matinee pictures ever made and that as a Christmas holiday attraction it is without an equal.

No production, either in the Goldwyn list of current releases, or among those of an earlier date, has been in such demand for special showings, particularly at matinees arranged for clubs, and classes of children.

Elsie Ferguson to Resume Stage Work

Miss Elsie Ferguson, star of Paramount-Artcraft pictures, will reappear on the dramatic stage early in the New Year.

Miss Ferguson is now engaged in the production of "Lady Rose's Daughter," Mrs. Humphrey Ward's story, for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and her stage work will not cause any interruption of her activities as a star of Paramount-Artcraft pictures. The play in which she will make her re-appearance in the theatre will be announced shortly.

Canadian Universal Has Superior News Reel

A NEWS reel of real news—the cream of three of the best and most outstanding news reels—is to be placed on the market about the middle of December by the Canadian Universal Film Company, Ltd. Exhibitors throughout Canada will then have a de luxe edition of the news weekly, par excellence.

The scheme originates from the fact that in many of the leading theatres, both in the United States and Canada, it is the custom to buy from two to three reels from which one reel is put together. This is presented to the patrons as the news reel of that particular theatre, in several instances. The cost of that one reel equals the total cost of the two or three reels from which the one was taken. The result of Mr. Hague's action is to effect a great economy for the theatres, and at the same time give them the cream of the weekly events.

With this object in view, Universal has appointed an expert in New York whose duty it is to edit three of the biggest and best news weeklies on the continent—International News, Current Events and the Screen Telegram.

A further editing, bringing these three reels into one of approximately 1,000 feet, ensures the creamiest of the cream to the exhibitors and furnishes them with a truly great news weekly at the same time, cutting down the cost by a very large amount.

Bessie Love's Last Work for Vitagraph

Bessie Love's final feature under the Vitagraph banner," "Pegeen," will be released before the Christmas holidays, and undoubtedly is the best of the many excellent features in which she appeared during her long association with Vitagraph. The popular story by Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd has been closely followed by William Barbarin Laub, who wrote the scenario, and difficult as it was, with the many film scenes, the camera work is unexcelled. The play is quite a departure from the usual story associated with the vivacious little star. It runs more to pathos than humor, but it has afforded Miss Love one of the best roles in her career.

Rapid Progress Recorded on Drury Lane Drama

Alice Joyce is making good progress on her next special feature, "The Sporting Duchess," and massive as the production is, the big Drury Lane spectacle is nearing completion with the exception of the horse race scenes, which play an important part in the story, and which, on account of the unfavorable weather, must be taken at a Southern race track. With the exception of the racing scenes all the outside locations have been visited and Miss Joyce is now at work on interiors at the Brooklyn studio. Many of these are unusually pretentious and have taken weeks to build. George Terwilliger is directing Miss Joyce.

Tom Moore to Give "Desert Gold" Holiday Booking

When Tom Moore, the Washington exhibitor, cast about for a big production for an extended engagement of two weeks or longer for his Garden Theatre, he booked Benjamin B. Hampton's Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold" and opens the W. W. Hodkinson release on Sunday, December 14, as the big Christmas season attraction at the National Capital. The Christmas holiday period represents the high-water mark of motion picture patronage in Washington and "Desert Gold," chosen for the breadth of its appeal to all classes, will have behind it the fullest advertising resources of Mr. Moore's organization.

Williams Finishing Up on Latest Vitagraph

Earle Williams has still one Vitagraph feature to come before the Christmas holidays, "When A Man Loves," a picture with both English and Oriental settings, which was made at the Hollywood studio before the star came East to the Brooklyn studio to play in "The Fortune Hunter," adapted from Winchell Smith's popular stage play. From a scenic viewpoint the former picture is said to be one of the most beautiful ever made in this country.

"The Inferior Sex," Miss Mildred Harris in Lead, Ready Soon

Next week will see the completion of "The Inferior Sex," the first Mildred Harris Chaplin picture filmed at the new Louis B. Mayer studio, 3800 Mission road. According to reports, Mr. Mayer is enthused with the showing of the scenes already taken, and both the Pacific coast and New York offices predict a huge success for the star and her latest starring vehicle.

Daily reviews of the day's work are being made by Mayer and Bennie Zeidman, production manager. It is said that an extensive exploitation campaign for the first Mildred Harris Chaplin picture has begun, and every indication is that the picture will be one of the greatest of the year.

Current Kinograms Runs Gamut in Variety

The current issue of Kinograms runs the gamut of human interest. It opens with the racing season at New Orleans showing the sport of Kings at its very height of interest. There is a comedy element supplied with the picturization of a man who loses on a "sure thing."

A delegation of churchmen from Ireland is presented to us in a close-up. They are in this country to tell the truth about Ireland.

The sailing of a Christmas Ship for Siberia also holds our attention. Its departure point is San Francisco and it is going to carry Christmas presents to our boys in the Far East.

Governor Coolidge of Massachusetts crops up in the week's news. Kinograms shows him inspecting the men who replaced the striking police in Boston.

The old French Opera House in New Orleans, one of the most historic spots in America, burns down. A Kinograms photographer was on the spot.

The Shah of Persia arrives in London. He is seen riding in state from Buckingham Palace to Guildhall in London. Many other topics are shown.

Studies Production Methods at Metro Studios

Identified for years with distributing interests in motion pictures, C. E. Shurtleff is in Los Angeles to make a thorough study of the producing end of the industry. As president of C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., Mr. Shurtleff, has turned over to Metro Pictures Corporation four Jack London novels. These are "Smoke Bellew," "The Star Rover," "A Daughter of the Snows," and "Burning Daylight." They will be produced for the Shurtleff corporation by Screen Classics, Inc., starring Mitchell Lewis, and will be released through Metro.

Mayflower Secures Franklin

Sydney Franklin, one of the youngest of directors in the motion picture industry, has been engaged by the Mayflower Film Corporation to direct a series of screen plays adapted from some of the Robert W. Chambers' stories. Negotiations for Mr. Franklin's engagement were handled through the offices of Arthur H. Jacobs, and the director is already en route for Los Angeles where the stories will be filmed.

"Everybody's Business" Is Being Well Received

Favorable reports are being received daily at the offices of the W. H. Productions Co. on the showings of their six-reel feature, "Everybody's Business," now being sold in the State Right market.

There is an absorbing love story throughout, a great deal of human interest, humor and pathos. But dominating all is an underlying, worth-while note that will appeal to every true American heart.

Sees a Banner Year for Motion Pictures

NINETEEN-TWENTY will be the banner year for motion pictures.

The above prediction was made by A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, after he checked reports from every section of the United States. For the past month Mr. Kirkpatrick has sent numerous requests to the leading exhibitors in the field, asking their frank opinion for the 1920 lookout. After he received these reports, the head of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation called to the New York office Newt Levi, western supervisor; Oscar Hansen, in charge of the central territory and Fred G. Sliter, eastern supervisor.

The past performances of the Robertson-Cole productions and the features to be released during the next twelve months were thoroughly discussed by Mr. Kirkpatrick and his field supervisors. The supervisors assured Mr. Kirkpatrick that the close co-operation between the exhibitor and the distributing company employed by Robertson-Cole was a sure winner and that the quality of the productions backed this plan to such a degree that unbelievable strides have been made by Robertson-Cole during the past two months.

"The country is motion picture mad," said Mr. Kirkpatrick, "but in spite of the great demand there is no place for the poor picture. Statistics compiled during the past three months alone prove conclusively that patrons will patronize a picture house where only established productions are run. Those houses which have failed can blame themselves, for they tried to put over old time stuff and were caught with the goods. The motion picture of today must have the goods and a good picture is a sure winner as a poor picture is a sure loser.

"The motion picture is an experiment no longer, hence the public will not take kindly to any pictures that are experiments. The theatre-goer wants entertainment of clean value and will not go to a house where pictures are shown which leave a bad taste after leaving the theatre. The educational value of a play of the screen is taken into consideration in packing houses.

"Nineteen-twenty will see the return of short subjects. The regular movie fan wants to break the monotony of a long program without a comedy or a special educational feature of the short variety. Robertson-Cole is well supplied with Supreme comedies, Adventure Scenics and the famous Martin Johnson series, 'On the Borderland of Civilization.'

"The ensuing year will see many more motion picture houses sprung up all over the country. The elimination of the saloon is one of the main boosts for the silent drama and now that the men are educated as regular motion picture fans the theatres cannot supply the demand for seats.

"Figures do not lie, and after I heard the optimistic reports of the three supervisors I am convinced that all motion picture records will go by the boards in the next twelve months."

A. S. Kirkpatrick, of Robertson-Cole

According to Mr. Levi, the west is way ahead of the other sections of the country in the showing of pictures and bigger prices are paid for their releases. He also states that motion picture statistics compiled during his last visit prove without a doubt that the Robertson-Cole releases are the most popular. The strides made in the West, as related by Mr. Levi, do not overshadow the belief of the eastern and central supervisors, who claim that Robertson-Cole has made bigger strides during the past two months than other concerns.

The meeting of the supervisors with Mr. Kirkpatrick and J. L. Herrick, field manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Concern, lasted all week.

Edgar Lewis Goes to California

"Other Men's Shoes" First Release for Pathe Completed; Others to be Made in West

EDGAR LEWIS, whose latest contribution to the photodramatic art is "Other Men's Shoes," a typical Lewis heart interest play adapted from the novel by Andrew Soutar, has gone to California to produce a series of pictures for Pathe distribution. "Other Men's Shoes" will be the first of the Lewis series to be released through Pathe.

While in California Mr. Lewis will produce several big outdoor stories with which he has become so generally associated. He was accompanied West by an entire technical crew. When he left New York he had under consideration for his first production on the West Coast, a story familiar to every American, which combines the action of "The Barrier," the tenseness of "The Thief," and the heart and love interest of "The Littlest Rebel." It is most likely he will make this play his initial production in California.

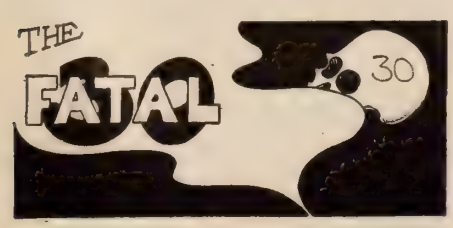
In the production of "Other Men's Shoes," Mr. Lewis followed the methods that have won for him recognition among the foremost producers of motion pictures. He puts the greatest emphasis on a good story, and in the selection of "Other Men's Shoes," he purchased one internationally popular. Andrew Soutar, the author, was one of the most famous correspondents during the big war. His stories from the Russian front won him a world-wide reputation and his "Other Men's Shoes" contains all the forcefullness and powerful appeal that marked his most noteworthy epics of the war.

Edgar Lewis has always placed the strongest faith in the value of his story. This is indicated by the authors who have contributed to his series of unbroken successes.

Equity Completes Peters Film

"Silk Husbands and Calico Wives" Announced as Special — Harry Garson Production

EQUITY PICTURES CORPORATION announces the completion of "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives," the new Harry Garson production adapted from a story by Monte M. Katterjohn, starring House Peters, the first special to follow "Eyes of Youth," Clara Kimball Young's latest release. Word has been received from the Garson Studios that prints would be shipped East upon completion within the next few days of the cutting and titling of the picture.



The new production, said to be featured by fine settings, is expected to afford Mr. Peters an admirable combination of a heart interest story, a highly colored and dramatic plot and unusual comedy-dramatic situations.

"Silk Husbands and Calico Wives" is declared a thoroughly and intensely modern story dealing with the city. It is a thrilling tale involving Deane Kendall (House Peters) young, brilliant and a dreamer who has come from the harvest fields to the study and practice of law, and Edith Beecher (Mary Alden) the court stenographer, a sweet and simple woman.

Harry Garson has surrounded the star with a cast of admirable distinction. Vincent Serrano, who portrayed the role of the Yogi in "Eyes of Youth" will be seen in a prominent role, and Sam Sothern, also seen in "Eyes of Youth" will be cast in one of the larger roles.

In addition Eva Novak, Mildred Reardon and Edward M. Kimball will complete the cast.

Aim to Make Curtis Pictures "Different"

L. Roy Curtiss' entrance into the motio picture field is termed as "quite differer from the usual."

It was while the various war drive were being conducted that Mr. Curtiss wa approached on the subject of producin and financing "The Cavell Case." Want ing to "do his bit" and forseeing what great aid a production of this kind woul be to the United States Government in th prosecution of the war, Mr. Curtiss con sulted his associates, who are bankers an leaders in the industrial field. Shortly thereafter he announced that he woulc finance "The Cavell Case" with the understanding at the outset of contributing the net proceeds from the picture to the United War Work organizations, of which Dr. John R. Mott was head.

However, as the tender from Mr. Curtiss was made at the signing of the armistice, and since the war work organizations returned to their respective headquarters to conduct their affairs independently at the close of their drive. November 19, 1918, the decision of the combined war work organizations was that this splendid offer was deeply appreciated and since the war promised to come to an end, they thought it only right that Mr. Curtiss should market the picture and make whatever profit out of it he could. Since then, many people have witnessed and enjoyed Julia Arthur's interpretation of Edith Cavell, the British Red Cross nurse, in "The Cavell case."

In May, 1919, Mr. Curtiss became the president of The Curtiss Pictures Corporation. This company has just finished work on a feature production, "Who's Your Brother?" in which Edith Taliaferro is starred, and the exhibitor and public may be assured that it is the aim of this organization to continue producing pictures of the "fewer and better" kind.

International News' Views Attract Wide Attention

Conclusive evidence of the wonderful reception throughout the United States of the great news reel scoop obtained by the International News in its issue No. 46, which showed pictures of the sinking of Allied vessels by the German submarines, is shown in a letter from S. L. Rothapfel, said by many to be the country's leading exhibitor, and who is now managing the California theatre in Los Angeles.

His letter of commendation to the Universal company in regard to this release is as follows:

"I cannot help but write and tell you that the subject obtained in the Hearst International News No. 46, "Sinking of the Merchants Vessels by the German submarines," is without question the most thrilling and remarkable picture I have ever seen in my career. The mere fact that you are keeping it in the News certainly reflects to the credit of the Universal Film Company.

Story by Fannie Hurst is Filmed by Universal

Some time ago a story by Fannie Hurst appeared in the Cosmopolitan Magazine under the title of "Oats for the Woman," which attracted a great deal of attention because it viewed a new angle on the double standard of morals as relating to the two sexes. Universal secured the screen rights to the story and filmed it under the title of "The Day She Paid."

This is the second production Universal has made from stories of Fannie Hurst, the first one being "The Petal on the Current," in which Mary MacLaren scored a country wide success.

Rex Ingram directed the production and Universal officials believe it to be one of the best Universal has produced for some time.

Francelia Billington as the model, Harry Van Meter as her employer, Charles Clary as her husband, Lillian Rich and Nancy Caswell as the children and Marcel Drageauson as a French designer, carry the heavy parts of the plot.

Dawley Directs Kenyon in "Harvest Moon"

J. Searle Dawley has been engaged by Deitrich-Beck, Inc., to direct their next production, "The Harvest Moon," in which Doris Kenyon will be the star. Work on "The Harvest Moon," which is from the play of Augustus Thomas, will be started during the week of December 9 at the Leah Baird Studios at Fort Lee.

Together with Augustus Thomas and Theodore C. Deitrich, Mr. Dawley has been working on the adaptation of "The Harvest Moon" for the past two weeks.

Production Speeded Up on Owen Moore's Picture

Director Wesley Ruggles stepped on the accelerator up at the Bronx studios this week, and production on Owen Moore's second Selznick picture, "The Woman Hater" jumped into second speed.

A big combination set of six rooms and a bath has been built for the interior scenes, which is the background for some lively comedy.

Jans to Put Out Big Features

Annual Output of Twelve Productions Announced; Plans Laid Thoroughly Far Ahead

THROUGH H. F. Jans, president of Jans Pictures Inc., comes an announcement of unusual importance not only to the exhibitors of the country but to the industry as a whole.

Jans Pictures Inc., have completed arrangements whereby they will make and market twelve pictures annually, one to be released each month. It is because of the thoroughness of the preparations made that this announcement takes on a great deal of importance for the plans of Mr. Jans and his associates have been carefully laid, considerable time and money has been expended to have them perfect in every detail before actual work began, and to make sure that the pictures to be made would be of the sort that exhibitors would stamp as real box office attractions.

Several well known stories have already been purchased, big stories that contain the proper proportion of punch, thrills and dramatic interest. Directors have been signed as well as stars. Announcements as to names, etc., will be forthcoming within the next two weeks, at which time an extensive advertising campaign will also be inaugurated.

In speaking of his plans Mr. Jans had this to say:

"As I control the Metro franchise for New Jersey and have been intimately connected with the exchange business for some years, I fully realize that there is a very big field for the out of the ordinary feature. And when I say out of the ordinary I mean just that, not the old familiar stuff that has been done to death, but pictures that are different, that will interest the public from a new angle and present opportunities for exploitation for the exhibitor that he has not had heretofore. Jans Pictures Inc., will make such pictures, for we have the material to do so. We have bought the proper kind of stories and we have contracted with directors that know how to produce them. In addition to this, the stars that we will present can be depended upon to bring business to the box office and please the public."

"Before making any public announcement about our company we first made sure that we were on the right track, that we had the right stories and the right people. Now that we are assured of this we are ready to go ahead and will, within a short time, announce the titles of our first productions as well as the directors, players, etc."

Jans Pictures Inc., are negotiating with a number of foreign buyers to handle the foreign rights to all of their productions. This will insure a wide distribution, the Jans features will, under this arrangement, be shown all over the world.

Pioneer Consolidates Branches

Exchanges in Four Cities in Single Co-operative Body; Costs of Distribution to Be Cut

ONE of the most important developments of the recent country-wide trip of M. H. Hoffman, General Manager of the Pioneer was the consolidation of the Pioneer exchanges in New York City, Buffalo, Cleveland and Detroit into a single co-operative body which will in the future make simultaneous releases, and will assist each other in putting over the Pioneer attractions. Later it is the intention to extend this practice of mutual help to the other Pioneer offices in Boston, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Chicago, Portland, Oregon, Los Angeles and San Antonio.

One of the practices which has already been started is the interchange of salesmen from one office to another whenever it is considered necessary to reinforce the sales department of any particular exchange.

This is but one of the many departures in exchange management which is being put to a practical test by the Pioneer.

Another will be a regrouping of territories upon a basis of transportation facilities instead of States. Prints of the Pioneer features will also be interchanged whenever circumstances demand.

The purpose of these experiments is to reduce distribution costs. While several of these new ideas have not been given as extensive a test as is thought necessary by the Pioneer executives, to form a definite opinion as to their actual value, it is safe to say that in some cases they have shown ways whereby exchange expenses may be cut appreciably. These changes will in no way affect the efficiency of the service rendered to the exhibitor, but will be to his advantage in the matter of quick delivery.

Demand for Rights to "The Blindness of Youth"

Mr. Sam Zierler, president of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, who has the New York State rights for the "Eyes of Youth," is negotiating with Murray W. Garsson for the New York State and northern New Jersey rights on his picture, "The Blindness of Youth."

Campaign on "Hawk" Serial

Burston Product Will Be Novelized; Producer Already Planning New Serial with Ford as Star

FURTHER details are announced regarding the extensive advertising campaign already launched for the latest Burston serial, "The Hawk's Trail," in which King Baggot is starred, supported by Grace Darmond and Rhea Mitchell. Directed by W. S. VanDyke, under the personal supervision of Louis Burston, president of the producing company, from the script by Nan Blair, the fifteen episodes are said to present unusual advertising possibilites. The plot construction follows the lines of a popular serial novel, in that the episode endings get their suspense from the dramatic situations of the pot rather than from interpolated stunts. This fact will not only be strongly featured in the publicity and newspaper advertising, but also in the stock and special episode paper.

In addition "The Hawk's Trail" is already in process of novelization, publishing arrangements having been made with a well-known New York publisher who was particularly impressed with the fact that as revealed by the script and episode synopses, "The Hawk's Trail" will prove a rattling good fiction story with all the qualities of a "best seller." In his character of the "Hawk" King Baggot has a most sympathetic role, that of a scientific criminologist, who in his efforts to restore the fortune of two sisters, wrongly withheld from them by means of a spurious will, finds occasion to adopt many disguises. Among the various characterizations seen at a recent preliminary review of some of the earlier episodes are those of a high-caste Chinaman, an old-time sailor, a man about town, a waiter, an East Indian Swami, as well as his own daring personality of the fearless man-hunter of the law.

Grace Darmond and Rhea Mitchell as the two sisters have much to do, and their beauty adds charm to the thread of a double love story that intensifies interest in the production.

"The Hawk's Trail" is the third serial to come from the Burston studios within a little over a year. Louis Burston who has been on the Coast continuously since May was working on "The Mystery of '13'" with Francis Ford, and "The Hawk's Trail," with King Baggot, at the same time. He is reported to be arranging the preliminaries of another Ford serial, a long cherished project, the scene to be laid in the Orient, and the plan contemplating the taking of a complete company across the Pacific for a stay of not less than six months.

Goldwyn Stock Active on Curb

Entry of Dupont Interests Followed by Heavy Trading; May Soon Be on N. Y. Exchange

COINCIDENT with the entry of the Dupont and allied powerful financial interests into the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, the stock of the corporation, which is capitalized at $20,000,000, was listed on the curb. Previous to this the only sales of the stock were among the unlisted securities and were few and far between. On the Curb it was firm and active, selling around 30, announcement having been made that with the entry of the new interests into the company the available stock had been privately oversubscribed some four times. Over 11,000 shares were traded in during the week and at Saturday's close the stock was selling at 30.

Due to the nature of the fresh capital invested in the company—which, aside from that supplied by the Duponts, includes the support of W. W. Laird, of Laird & Company of Wilmington; R. R. M. Carpenter, Vice-President of the Dupont Powder Company; C. C. Kurtz, Vice-President of the Wilmington Trust Company; E. V. R. Thayer, President of the Chase National Bank of New York; Duncan A. Holmes, Vice-President of the Chase Securities Corporation; William Topkis, George T. Bissel, G. W. Davison, Vice-President of the Central Union Trust Company of New York; Macmillan Hoopes and Abbot M. Wittenberg, a member of H. Conten and Company—due to these diverse and outstanding financial powers now behind the Goldwyn Corporation, there is a general impression that the listing of the company's security on the New York Stock Exchange is only a matter of time.

The announcement of the entry of the new interests into the motion-picture industry was followed by wide public and editorial comment to the effect that the results must be gratifying to the picture fans and also to motion-picture critics. Summing up the comments, the consensus of opinion seems to be that the industry is now on a sound basis and the day of the speculator in the business is over. It was said that the last vestiges of the ancient notion that photoplays are an ephemeral experiment are exploded by the consolidation of big, solid finance with the industry, as typified by the entrance of the Duponts and others into the Goldwyn Corporation.

Emma Dunn Begins Work on "Old Lady 31"

Emma Dunn started work before the camera last week at the new Metro studios in Hollywood as the featured player in the Screen Classics, Inc., production of "Old Lady 31." Although Miss Dunn is featured, she is surrounded by an all-star cast.

Warner Plans to Lease Studios

Upon the arrival in Los Angeles of Sam Warner, of Warner Brothers, from New York, definite action will be taken respecting the leasing of a studio, which will be the permanent home for the Al. St. John Paramount Comedy Company, and the Helen Holmes Serial Company. Several studios are being fitted, but no definite action will be taken until the arrival of Mr. Warner.

Helen Holmes, who has completed work in her first serial for this company, which is titled, "The Fatal Fortune," arrived from Jacksonville, Fla., during the past week, and everything will be in readiness for the filming of first scenes for her second serial, under the direction of G. T. Hamilton within the next few days. Director Hamilton has been in the East for the past year, where he was engaged by the serial company to guide the destinies of Miss Holmes in her coming production.

Theme: Brutality.
Characters: Bob Phillips, an engineer; Alfred Netcomb, rubber magnate; Haggins, general manager of the rubber works; Dr. Pinhon, plantation surgeon; Evelyn Reade; Reade, her father; Portuguese, Indians, etc.
The Plot: Bob Phillips is offered a position as assistant manager of a rubber plantation in Brazil by Alfred Netcomb whom he tutored at college. Phillips has always longed for adventure and welcomes this opportunity. He goes to the plantation which is in the wilds of Brazil on the edge of a jungle. He finds the plantation in charge of Haggins, a slave driver, who usurps the powers of the law, keeps a private jail on the grounds for the men who do not work hard enough to suit him, maintains a private police force for clubbing the rebellious workers into subjection and generally strikes first and inquires afterward in case of trouble. As the place is miles from civilization and the only boat belongs to the company, the men who work on the plantation have the choice of putting up with such justice as is meted out or walking several hundred miles through the jungle, in danger of their lives from wild beasts and natives. Haggins is a hard, strong master who rules through fear. Phillips cannot bring himself to feel that this is the proper method of running things. A strange power boat arrives with Evelyn Reade and her father—the latter desperately ill with a fever. Haggins is called away to another plantation and Phillips is left in charge. He tries gentler methods with the men and finds that they take advantage of him. An insurrection is attempted but finally put down after Phillips is compelled to use his automatic and kill several men. He is regarded as weak by the girl, by Dr. Pinhon, a mixture of Indian and Portuguese. After the rebellion Phillips installs a new method, whereby those who do not work are put in jail without being beaten and those who work are advanced to better pay and food. Pinhon falls in love with Evelyn and to gain control of the situation poisons the workers at the table of the promoted and casts suspicion upon Phillips. Phillips is attacked by his own police and barely escapes with his life. Pinhon takes charge, overcomes Evelyn, makes her a prisoner and tells her that he will let her father die of thirst if she does not consent to become his wife by a simple ceremony of mutual consent. Phillips finds his way back just as Haggins arrives on the scene and begins to take summary vengeance against the natives who have again revolted. Haggins kills Pinhon, being himself in love with Evelyn. Phillips protests against Haggins' methods of punishing the natives and the two men fight. The natives come to Phillips' aid and declare him the master of the plantation. Evelyn finds that she prefers Phillips with his gentleness to Haggins and his cruelty. The Government investigates and commends Phillips for his methods of management.

Husbands and Wives
By Neil Moran

Character of Story: Comedy.
Theme: Jealousy.
Characters: Billy Wallace; Helen Wallace, his wife; Roland Steegan; Ruth Steegan, his wife; Mrs. Catty, a neighbor of the Steegans; Mrs. Lane, Mrs. Catty's grandmother-in-law; Jacques, headwaiter at Bellamy's Restaurant.
The Plot: Roland Steegan and his wife had been quarrelling about his relatives as they drove up Fifth Avenue in their automobile on the way home. Mrs. Steegan angrily declared that she would get out and go home by some other conveyance but owing to the fact that there was a car strike, she changed her mind about this. Here the action begins. As the car is halted in the traffic a man is endeavoring to board a Fifth Avenue bus next to the car but is refused admittance. The conductor will not let him on and advises him to get a taxi. The man says that he has tried but cannot find one. Roland invites the stranger to get into his car and ride. As the drive is on the left side of the car the man is compelled to get into the tonneau which he does. Mrs. Steegan in her angry impatience is stamping her foot and steps on the stranger's toe. She then apologizes and thus opens conversation with him. Roland is immediately jealous but she pretends that Roland is the chauffeur and continues to converse in low tones with the stranger until they drop him near his home uptown. The stranger, Billy Wallace, has a wife as jealous as Roland Steegan. She happens to be on a bus and sees him in the car. Another friend who saw him in the car—at a moment when the swaying of the vehicle caused Mrs. Steegan's to lean upon him and appear to be practically in his arms, reports that Roland is going about with a woman who is supposed to be a chorus girl. Mrs. Steegan picks up Billy's card case in the car and telephones him to come for it. She gets his wife on the telephone on her first attempt to reach him and rouses her jealousy by refusing to give her name. Steegan is out of town but Mrs. Catty sees Wallace leave the Steegan apartment about nine o'clock in the evening and treasures up the information for Steegan's return. Helen accuses Wallace of running around with a chorus girl and threatens to get a divorce. Steegan returns and finds Wallace's card case which he forgot to take after going after it. Both families seem on the verge of a split-up. Mrs. Lane, grandmother of Mrs. Catty's husband, learns of the situation and offers her services to Mrs. Steegan and Billy Wallace to straighten matters out. She sends an anonymous message to Helen and Roland to come to Bellamy's restaurant to procure damaging evidence, the one against her husband, the other against his wife. They come. Billy and Ruth are with Mrs. Lane. Roland and Helen meet one another and recognize each other as old friends. They decide to dine together in a private room where they tell one another their troubles. The head waiter learns of this and he tells the pair downstairs, so that those who came to accuse are found together and general explanations are made with the assistance of Mrs. Lane.

Rim O' the World
By B. M. Bower

Character of Story: Western romance.
Theme: Love and Adventure.
Characters: Mary Hope, school-teacher; Tom Lorrigan, ranchman; Belle, his wife; Al Lorrigan, their son; Marmaduke Lorrigan, another son; Lancelot Lorrigan, their youngest son; Alexander Douglas, Harry Hope's father; Mrs. Alexander Douglas, Mary Hope's father; Mrs. Douglas, her mother.
The Plot: Tom Lorrigan, born of a fighting stock, not over-particular about whose cattle they handled or sold, married Belle, a former showgirl who landed in Jumpoff, the nearest town, looking for the end of the world. Belle had nowhere to go and she looked to Tom Lorrigan more like an angel than a woman, so inside of twenty-four hours she was mistress of the Devil Tooth ranch. Belle never made many friends among the women but the men came to respect her for her ability to shoot and her general thoroughbred qualities. Their sons grew up to be cowpunchers of ability, but one of them, Duke, was inclined to shift the weight of his responsibility to one of the other brothers when something went wrong. Alexander Douglas, about the time when this story really opens, missed a spotted yearling and accuses Lorrigan of stealing it. Lorrigan resented this but could not shoot Douglas for the simple reason that the old Scotchman never carried a gun. Then they went to law about it and while Lorrigan was exonerated legally, the neighbors still clung to the idea that he was guilty. Old Tom swears vengeance on every one connected with the affair. Mary Hope Douglas sets up a school for rancher's children in a little hut near the Lorrigan home. Tom Lorrigan stumbles on the school and breaks it up, sending the children and Mary Hope home. Then he, contrarily enough, builds a real school house on his own property and fits it out in good shape for the children, even furnishing a piano for it. At first Mary Hope says that she will not use it, but Lorrigan insists that if she does not use it he will have it burned to the ground, so she consents. A dance is given for the opening of the school and outside of some shooting goes off well enough. Mary Hope is humiliated at the idea of having these favors from the Lorrigans and determines to pay for the piano and the school house so she gives a dance for that purpose and does not invite the Lorrigans. Old man Lorrigan is angry at this and rides to the school house with his band during the dance and takes away the piano. Lance and Mary Hope have meanwhile fallen in love with one another. Old Douglas is taken ill and dies. Mrs. Douglas is ill and nursed by Belle—a stroke of paralysis. Lance discovers that a detective is trailing his father and brother and rescues the detective who has been hurt. The detective, not knowing him, gives him certain evidence to turn over to the authorities. This evidence proves that old Lorrigan and his other sons have been stealing cattle. Lance insists that the old man and the boys leave the country. They do so and Lance is married to Mary Hope.

The Woman Pays
By Frederic P. Ladd

Character of story: Society drama.
Theme: Triangle.
Characters: Henry Arthur Leslie, a society clergyman; Winthrop Kent, an author and editorial writer; Victoria Kent, his wife; Elizabeth Newell, her mother; Elihu Curtis, a newspaperman; Elinor Curtis, his sister.
The Plot: Henry Arthur Leslie is one of those popular preachers who is brilliant but shallow and whose sermons are sensational without having any real depth. He is handsome, winning and magnetic and acquires a great following, especially among the women. One of his greatest admirers is Victoria Kent. She has always wanted her husband to seek the aid of personal publicity in forwarding his career but he has refused to do this. She encourages Leslie in his methods. Leslie forms the habit of dropping into Kent's for a chat and a glass of wine of an evening—usually with Mrs. Kent for Kent is working on a play and finds that he works better at the office, especially when his wife's mother is about. Mrs. Newell is a bore. Leslie is taken ill at Kent's apartment and has to stay there for two or three days. He is now more intimate than ever with the Kent family. Kent comes home twice and finds the minister drinking champagne with his wife. He also finds that she is comparing him unfavorably with the handsome young clergyman, so he tells her that this must end and Leslie must no longer come to the house. Leslie has asked Kent to help him write for a magazine, "The Confessions of a Clergyman" over his real name. Kent regards this as a cheap bid for publicity. Mrs. Kent is highly indignant at her husband's refusal and since she cannot have the minister at her house to help him with it, she goes to the study in the parsonage and works with Leslie there. Kent finally leaves town for his summer vacation in the mountains with Elihu Curtis and Elinor Curtis. Victoria stays in town on a trumped up excuse and says she will arrive later. She then makes many excuses, saying that her mother insists upon coming along. Mrs. Newell does go, but Victoria stays in the city. The Curtises return and Curtis calls upon the Rev. Leslie when Mrs. Kent is in the study. Leslie shuts her in a wardrobe. Curtis sees a portion of her skirt protruding from the door and is suspicious. He waits outside until he sees her emerge. Leslie is now afraid of scandal and tells her that he cannot marry her even if she gets a divorce from her husband, which she has been planning to do. Victoria stricken with remorse, flees to the country just as her husband comes to town. Then she writes him, confessing her unfaithfulness. She tells him if he can forgive her to seek her at the mountain lake where she is. He goes but as she approaches the shore in a boat she falls in the lake and is drowned. Kent traps Leslie in church after service and denounces him. Leslie collapses. Kent forces him to resign from the ministry and tells him that if he hears of his ever preaching again he will make public the facts. Kent turns for consolation to his good friend, Elinor Curtis, who has grown to love him.

The Other Man's Wife
By Frank Richardson

Character of story: English society drama.

Theme: Ambition.

Characters: Richard Meyville, a barrister; Gwendolen Ainslee, a society woman; Jake Ainslee, her husband; Lady Melville, Richard's mother; Montague Cliftonville, an actor, Richard's brother; Mrs. Paxton-Pryce, Gwendolen's mother; Ethel, Richard's sister; Billy Brinstable, barrister; John Mosely, a law clerk; Lord Lashbridge; Justice Tufnell.

The Plot: Richard Meyville and his brother, Montague Cliftonville, have both inherited a great personal vanity and love of success from their father who was a knight. Richard, however, is the more conservative and has certain gentlemanly instincts which seem to be lacking in the latter. Cliftonville is insincere, selfish and almost crazed on the subject of self-advertisement. The support of their mother and sister falls upon Richard until the sister marries a rather vulgar solicitor, Billy Brinstable, much to the disgust of Richard. Richard has an affair with Gwendolin Ainslee whose husband is rich and a professional invalid. Ainslee is much older than Gwendolin and takes little interest in anything beyond his symptoms and his medicines. Richard and Gwendolin are deeply in love with one another and she exerts all of her influence to get Richard on in his career, introducing him to people whom she thinks likely to prove useful to him. Richard has been struggling along hardly making both ends meet when a law clerk of his acquaintance offers to back him on his savings, the clerk to receive double wages for five years as a return for his investment and a silent partnership. Richard agrees to this and moves to better chambers. He is a brilliant barrister and soon makes a mark. A notorious Yogi and his wife are freed by Richard upon a point of law after their conviction seems a foregone conclusion. This case is sent to Richard by Gwendolin in round-about fashion after he refuses to take it up directly. Lord Lashbridge falls in love with Gwendolin and knowing that he stands no chance while Richard is in the way proceeds to interfere with Richard's career with the idea of forcing Richard to give up the woman. The clerk who backs Richard also uses his influence to get Richard to break off the affair, but this has no influence upon him. It is only when warned by Judge Tufnell that he can never become a Queen's Counsel unless he gives her up that Richard decides to do so. Directly and rather brutally he tells her that he must give her up because of his career, which has already suffered somewhat because of some difficulties into which his brother-in-law drifted and from which there was no way out but suicide, suggested by Richard. Gwendolin is stunned. She goes to answer a call from her husband who is ill and Richard sees her putting down a bottle on the table. Ainslee dies and Richard suspects that Gwendolin has killed him. He stays away. She is taken ill and sends for him many times but he does not come until she is at the point of death

Ashes to Ashes
By Isabel Ostrander

Character of story: Character study.

Theme: Crime.

Characters: Norman Storm, trust company officer; Leila, his wife; Millard, a neighbor; George Holworthy, Norman's best friend; Dick Brewster, broker; Julie Brewster, his wife; Dr. Carr; Nicholas Langhorne, president of Storm's company; Jack Horton, engineer; detectives, reporters, etc.

The Plot: This is an odd sort of detective story very much on the order of De Maupassant. There is no mystery in it. The action is clear from the start. Norman Storm is jealous of his wife. An innocent deception practiced on him by way of a birthday surprise in connection with her efforts to shield Julie Brewster from the consequences of an indiscreet flirtation convince Storm that she has been unfaithful to him. He finds that she has visited Brewster's office in the city—where she actually went to buy some property for his birthday gift. He overhears a telephone conversation she has with Mrs. Brewster but does not know that she is talking to a woman. He comes home unexpectedly and finds Brewster in the house, hides until he has gone and then confronts his wife. Leila, as a matter of fact, has just persuaded Brewster that his wife has only been indiscreet and that it is his duty to help her out of her troubles. Storm is sure that Brewster is Leila's lover and charges her with it. They quarrel and in a fit of blind rage he strikes her over the head with a golf club, killing her. Then he carefully cleans the club, burns his handkerchief which has blood upon it, arranges the body so that she seems to have fallen against the fender and goes to bed, waiting for the servants to find her in the morning. He leads the doctor and others to believe that his wife fell on the fender in a fainting fit. Suspician is lulled. He is harassed by his conscience, especially when he learns that his suspicions were untounded. He desires to get together enough money to go abroad but loses in speculation. He now has an apartment in the city. He meets Jack Horton, an old college friend, passing through the city with a large sum of money in gold and notes. He learns that nobody knows where Horton is. He entices Horton on a walk on a lonely part of Riverside Drive, hits him over the head with a loaded cane, killing him, and secretes the bag with the money which Horton has left in his apartment. Storm is now filled with the idea that he can commit any sort of crime and escape but soon realizes that little by little George Holworthy is getting into his hands threads of evidence which will convict Storm. Norman therefore invites Holworthy to go on a fishing trip and takes him first to stay the night at the suburban cottage where he committed his first murder. Some old newspapers packed in a trunk—of the same dates as those found in the murdered man's bag which Storm left checked at Grand Central after removing the money—and other evidence discovered on the spot prove to Holworthy that Storm is guilty and he is apprehended at the last moment.

Locale: New York and suburbs.

Picture High Lights: The development of the criminal instinct in Storm is worked out very well and the story has many strong dramatic points but is hardly the sort of thing that would please the average audience.

They Never Come Back
By Edgar Franklin

Character of story: Comedy.

Theme: Blood transfusion.

Characters: Henry Parven, aristocrat; Bill Trainor, Henry's friend; Mrs. Parven, Bill's mother; Dr. George Bull; Miss Moon, trained nurse; Dr. Haskins; Dr. Dowling; Aunt Maude; Uncle Horace; Molton, Henry's partner; Brown, the unknown; Miss "Buster" Bevan; and others.

The Plot: Henry Parven, once a husky young man, has been suffering for two years from anemia and feels that he is dying by inches in spite of the quantities of medicine which have been poured into him by Dr. Dowling, the family physician. He is left alone for the evening and receives as a visitor his old college chum, Bill Trainor, a hearty, rather noisy young man who jars on the sensibilities of the rest of Henry's family. Bill tells Henry that he has made up his mind to cure him by taking him to Dr. George Bull, who is a real sure-enough doctor, and who does things that Dr. Dowling never dreamed of. Henry is skeptical, but willing to be shown. Dr. Bull makes an examination and tells Henry that a transfusion of blood will be necessary. An appointment is made. Henry begins to feel somewhat doubtful, but by the next morning feels so mean that he is willing to take a chance on anything. He arrives at the private hospital and is introduced to a mountainous young man who is to furnish $1,000 worth of blood for him. Henry recovering from the operation finds himself possessed of an immense vitality and a curious desire to tear things wide open. He nearly knocks out a window cleaner who wants to air his room, makes love to the trained nurse and lands on the solar plexus of her fiance, Dr. Haskins, when the latter objects. Bill and Henry go out to make a day of it. Henry shocks his family by breaking the piano to prove that he can lift it and upsets his partner by insisting upon the firm procuring war contracts before night. He then buys a $4,000 automobile and he and Bill take a joy ride, winding up at a restaurant where they meet "Buster" Bevan, Bill's fiance, a beautiful young woman of Junoesque proportions and a twanging voice. Henry feels strangely attracted toward her and she toward him. After the show they drop sleepy Bill at home and take another ride and supper together. Arriving at home Henry is tricked into a drinking contest with the family doctor (having beaten up three garage men on the way home) and is doped. He awakens early in the morning and escapes after ascertaining that the family think him crazy. He takes Buster for another ride, is held up and knocks five highwaymen cold. This wins Buster's heart. He introduces her to his family but it is a frost and almost breaks up the engagement. Bill hears of it and behaves handsomely, congratulating them, but, at the same time, entices Henry to a place where a man in a mask is challenging all comers. He expects Henry to be knocked out but Henry knocks out the giant in the mask and discovers it is the man whose blood he had. He arranges for a second transfusion and awakes feeling as he did before he was sick—but lacking the caveman urge which he had after the first transfusion. He is really relieved to learn that while he has been unconscious Bill and Buster have been married. Brown, the fighter, explains that the first transfusion took away his pep and the second evidently restores Henry to normal.

In and Out West Coast Studios

Goldwyn Studio Notes

UPON instructions from New York, necessary plans were made this week for sending one unit east to make the next subject in which Mabel Normand will be starred. Victor Schertzinger, who has just made the final scenes for the Madge Kennedy subject, "The Blooming Angel," from the book by Will Irwin, will go east, and will be accompanied by his assistant, Will Brewster, and Cameraman, George Webber. Walter Hiers and Cullen Landis, who are working in other photoplays now being produced at the Goldwyn plant, will leave within a day or two for the east following Victor Schertzinger, to play the important parts in the Normand picture. The story selected for Miss Normand is entitled "Maggie." It is expected five weeks will be required for the filming of the Normand picture.

Wyndham Standing has been engaged by Goldwyn Company in New York, and will arrive in Los Angeles within a few days to play the leading rôle in the film version of the Basil King story, "Earth Bound." Continuity and settings for this have been ready for several days, and filming will be started under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter, upon the arrival of Mr. Standing.

Director Harry Beaumont, who is now making the final scenes for "Going Some," a Rex Beach story, will be the next director for Madge Kennedy. Three stories suitable for Miss Kennedy are on file in the scenario department, but no selection has been made.

Bertram Grassby has been engaged by Goldwyn to play the role of Rodney Page in "Dangerous Days," adapted from the Mary Roberts Rinehart story, which is being produced by Director Reginald Barker.

Thomas H. Ince Newsettes

AFTER a vacation of several weeks, Enid Bennett returned to the Ince Studio this week to resume work. Her vehicle will be an original story by C. Gardner Sullivan, who is also the author of the continuity. Fred Niblo, who has directed all of the Bennett pictures in the past year, is to be in charge of this production. The picture is now being cast and it is expected production work will be started this week.

Director Irvin Willat and the Hobart Bosworth troupe of Ince Players have been at Catalina Islands all this week, making under water scenes for "Below the Surface." The Ince Studio chartered a ninety foot boat, which will be used for exteriors in and about the Catalina Islands and will also serve as the home of the players during their stay at the island. For the making of the under sea pictures, a specially built diving bell has been made and it is now being used very successfully. The films received from Director Willat are all that were expected and in some cases he has secured some very remarkable effects. These pictures show some thrilling scenes, in which Mr. Bosworth and Floyd Hughes take the strenuous parts.

Charles Ray is at work in "Homer from Home," which is an adaptation by Agnes Christine Johnston, from an original story by Alexander Hull. This will, in all probability, be the last Ray picture made by Mr. Ince, inasmuch as the star's contract expires early in January. The supporting cast for Mr. Ray includes Arthur White, Walter Higbie, Priscilla Bonner, Otto Hoffman, Mollie McConnell, Tom Guise and a number of others.

Forrest Stanley who plays one of the principal roles in "The Triflers," a Universal production

Universal Activities

UNIVERSAL CITY has taken on new life because this week marks the beginning of a number of new features. Besides the twelve feature directors, there are four serial companies at work, and two two-reel companies.

Because it was impossible to secure certain players at the present time, the management at Universal has decided to postpone the filming of "The Yellow Orchid," starring Tsuru Aoki, and instead the Japanese star will work in a film entitled "Blossom." Director William C. Dowlan has been selected to make this subject and the principal players, who have been selected are Stanhope Wheatcroft and Magda Lane. Miss Lane has appeared in a number of Universal subjects and for the past several months has been featured in two-reel Western pictures.

Douglas Gerrard is to direct the next film starring Mary MacLaren, which is from the story by J. G. Hawks. The film has been titled "The Forged Bride," and a cast including such well known players as Barney Sherry, Thomas Jefferson and Dagmar Godowsky, with Harold Miller and Frances Raymond have been selected to support Miss MacLaren.

The next starring vehicle for James J. Corbett, who has just completed work in the feature "The Gentleman of Avenue A," has been selected and is "The Dazzling Rogue," which is an original story by John B. Clymer. The continuity for this is ready and by the time Director Jack Ford returns from his New York vacation, all settings and properties will be in readiness for filming.

Doings at Vitagraph Plant

WILLIAM DUNCAN is to continue as a director and star for the Vitagraph Company, as President Albert E. Smith, who has been at the Coast for the past several weeks, has made a new contract with Mr. Duncan, which will be effective for the next year or more. No details concerning the new contract have been made public by Mr. Duncan or Mr. Smith, but it is understood that by the terms of this, Duncan will produce both serials and feature subjects. It is also hinted that the contract places Duncan in the position of the highest salaried serial producer of today.

For the past four weeks it has been expected that Mr. Duncan would work in a five or six reel dramatic subject, but now plans made known reveal the fact that he is to continue for the present in the making of a serial. The new subject will be more of a dramatic one, even though an episodical release.

Miss Edith Johnson, who has been the leading woman in the past two Duncan serials, is to continue in that capacity, and it is the intention of President Smith to surround Mr. Duncan and Miss Johnson with the best possible talent obtainable. While the new serial is to be more of a dramatic subject, it is also made known that a great deal of the interest will be maintained by a new series of thrillers to be created by Duncan.

The title selected for the first vehicle is "Love and Honor" and the story and scenario is the joint work of President Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady.

While preparations are being made for the filming of a serial which will feature Joe Ryan, who has been with the Duncan Company for the past two years, it was decided the Ryan Company should make a two-reel O. Henry story and they now are at work on this.

given out any of the cast for this episode subject.

"The Ransom of Mack" is the title of an O. Henry story now being made by Director David Smith at the Vitagraph Studio. This short subject has a very notable cast, including Frank Hayes, Robert McKenzie, W. J. Horne, Charles Spere and Beulah Booker.

The Big Chinese Temple Set, especially built for the Invisible Hand Serial, starring Antonio Moreno, was destroyed this week, Inasmuch as all of the scenes on this setting have been completed and O. K.'d. Director W. J. Bauman and the Moreno Company are now working on the ninth and tenth episode in which there are a great many railroad scenes. For the making of these two trains have been leased from the Salt Lake Railroad and a number of special properties have been created to make this feature of the serial a very emphatic one.

What Metro Is Doing

BERT LYTELL and company, under the direction of Jack Dillon, are at Monterey, Cal., making the last of the scenes for "The Right-of-Way," the Sir Gilbert Parker story of the Canadian Northwest. The company will be home by the end of the week, and their arrival will mark the completion of this film.

The first Drury Lane melodrama, "The Best of Luck," was shipped to the New York office of the Metro this week, after a review by the heads of departments at the Metro studios. This film, which was made under the direction of Ray Smallwood with a cast headed by Jack Holt and Kathryn Adams, received the unstinted praise of the powers that be at this studio.

"Should a Woman Tell," featuring Alice Lake, is in the cutting rooms, as is also Viola Dana's "The Willow Tree," made by Director Henry Otto.

The casting department is now making arrangements for the filming of "The Hope," which will be directed by Herbert Blache.

The only two companies at work at the Metro studios are those of the Nazimova unit making "The Heart of a Child," and that under the direction of John Ince, which is filming "Old Lady Thirty-One." This latter has Emma Dunn as the featured player, and during the week most of the time of the company has been spent at the Los Angeles County Farm where many of the inmates worked in pictures, and thus earned their first money in months.

Famous Players-Lasky

ANNOUNCEMENT concerning future activities at the Famous Players-Lasky Hollywood studio made known this week by Jesse L. Lasky, who made important announcement respecting future special Artcraft production and the engagement of important people, as well as statements respecting other productions to be filmed.

The work of arranging for a special Artcraft production, adapted from the William Gillette play, "Held by the Enemy," are now under way. This film will have an exceptionally strong all-star cast and will be made under the direction of Donald Crisp.

Thomas N. Heffron, who formerly directed Marguerite Clark and has since been on the coast, where he has made a number of pictures, has been engaged to direct Robert Warwick and an all star cast in "Thou art the Man," which is an adaptation from the Miles Calthorpe novel. The supporting cast for this subject has not been made known.

Arrangements are now under way for the filming of the Robert Chambers' novel "The Fighting Chance," which will be directed by Charles Maigne, who is expected to arrive from the east early this month. Conrad Nagel, who has been leading man in the Broadway production, opposite Alice Brady, has been engaged to play the lead in this film and Anna Q. Nilsson will play the opposite lead.

Upon the completion of his present subject "The Bear Trap," Wallace Reid will work in an adaptation from the Saturday Evening Post story, "The Dancing Fool," which will be made under the direction of Sam Wood. Inasmuch as Mr. Reid is winner of almost fifty trophies at various dancing contests, it is reasonable to expect that he will give a very artistic exhibition of the terpsichorean art in this film.

Director William D. Taylor has completed the editing of "Huckleberry Finn," which was photographed about six months ago, and after this was viewed in the projection room at the Lasky Studio, it was decided that it should be released as a Paramount-Artcraft Special. The date for the release of this film is yet to be set.

The second Houdini special, "Terror Island," has been completed under the direction of James Cruze, and Director Cruze will now take up the filming of the Bryant Washburn subject, "Where Julia Rules."

Director Walter Edwards is continuing on the Ethel Clayton subject "The Young Mrs. Winthrop" and within the next few days Director George Melford will complete the revised version of the "Sea Wolf."

Here and There

THE Hank Mann Comedy Company is now located in their new quarters at the Francis Ford studio, and this week began the making of a new series of twenty-six two-reel subjects, the first of which has been titled "Broken Bubbles." According to a statement issued by Morris R. Schlank, producer of these comedies, the subjects will be handled through the Arrow Film Corporation.

It is the intention to retain two directors continuously, and with this plan to be carried out, Herman Raymaker and Fred. C. Windemier have been engaged. One director will be filming a comedy, while the other supervises the editing and assembling of a subject, and prepares the story for the next production. This plan, Producer Schlank finds, affords competent direction and sufficient time for preparation of story.

Short Items of Interest About Popular People

With the engagement of Robert B. Phelan, as cameraman for Metro, by Superintendent Clifford Butler, a heretofore unpublished chapter in the lives of three well-known cameramen became known. Phelan was working with Dal Clawson, now with Lois Weber, and Dey Jennings, photographer for Goldwyn, in Death Valley, California, when the call of the camera first hit him. The three cameramen of today, were then surveyors, putting in their time marking off quarter sections in the then desert of California. That was in 1910 and they all made up their minds they would be cameramen and they've been making motion pictures ever since. These three men have been responsible for some of the most remarkable photography introduced on the screen and they all attribute a portion of their success to their intimate knowledge of the ability of a lens.

Jean Acker and Rudolph Valentino were married November 4. It all came about on a dare, and through the offices of Maxwell Karger the promises to Love, Honor and Obey were made at a party given in honor of President and Mrs. Richard Rowland at the home of Joseph Engle. Practically all of the luminaries of the Metro studio were present. Miss Acker will be remembered as "Daisy" in "Lombardi Ltd." Mr. Valentino is an Italian ball-room dancer whose most recent appearance was in "Eyes of Youth" with Clara Kimball Young, as second heavy.

Joseph Rock, who has performed all kinds of hazardous stunts for the camera, while working with his partner comedian, Earle Montgomery, took on a thrill this week that will be indelible in his memory. He rode a horse. That in itself is nothing, but the horse was some horse—old, decrepit in every respect, even to weak knees, and wobbly shoulders. The nag had a desire to be peppish but the pep ran out after traversing one-half a block, and sunk to the pavement. Joe went through space by the sudden stopping of the beast and experienced all of the thrills of having failed to conquer a bucking broncho.

Brandt on Trip Boosting "The Confession"

Several wires and letters have been received at the New York offices of the National Film Corporation of America from Joe Brandt, general representative of the company, who is making an extended trip in the West in the interest of "The Confession," a National super-release which stars Henry Walthall, star of "The Birth of a Nation."

Brandt says that in nearly every city visited exhibitors have through their leagues and associations set themselves on record as being advocates of bigger, better and fewer films. Stories with strong heart interest, and dealing with problems of the day, he said, were in constant demand, and were going over bigger than the ordinary types.

The next release of the National is to be "Hearts and Masks," from the famous romance by Harold MacGrath, in which Elinor Field, Francis MacDonald and Lloyd Bacon are featured. This production is on its way East from the Coast.

Morey Several Pictures Ahead

Again Seen as Mountaineer in "The Darkest Hour"—One More Film Ready and One Nearly So

"THE DARKEST HOUR," the first Harry T. Morey feature to be released by Vitagraph in six weeks, is now being shown. Since he completed this feature, Mr. Morey has finished "The Birth of a Soul," a story of the mountains of North Carolina, and is now well into "Detective Jim," which was written especially for him by Frederick Van Rensselaer Day, originator of the "Nick Carter" detective stories.

Mr. Morey has a double characterization in "The Darkest Hour." The role is the same, that of Peter Schuyler, but in one half of the picture Schuyler is a wealthy club man, and in the other a worker in the lumber camps of the great Canadian Northwest, Peter loses his memory through a blow on the head while in his city home, and spends several months in the lumber camps, where he marries. Then another accident restores his memory, and he returns to his original status, with no recollection of what transpired in the interval. Meantime a former admirer has set herself up as his widow, claiming his estate, and when Peter returns with no idea of what he has been doing during his absence from home, she claims to be his wife. Then the little bride of the mountains follows her husband to the city, finds him, and through the clever work of Peter's doctor friend, recalls the past to him and wins his love anew.

The double characterization affords Mr. Morey's splendid opportunities to display his versatility, especially in his work as a lumber jack, and Jean Paige, his leading woman, who has just been raised to stardom by Vitagraph, gives an excellent portrayal of the little bride who has to fight for her husband. Others in the excellent cast are: Anna Lehr, George Howard, George Majeroni, Robert Gaillard, Louis Walheim, Herbert Pattee, Jane Jennings and Harry Hallem. The lumber jacks in the camps in the White Mountains where many of the scenes were taken, also played several of the smaller parts and made up the necessary mob. Paul Scardon directed.

Sales Force of American Film Strengthened

The American Film Company, Inc., during the past few months has greatly strengthened its sales force in the Central West and in the accompanying picture we have here, three of that corporation's aces who are leaders in guiding the sales destinies of "Flying A" pictures in the Chicago district. Reading from left to right: Charles Filkins, Chicago Sales Manager; Paul De Outo, Central West Sales Manager, and Charles M. Keppler, Assistant to Mr. Filkins, in charge of Chicago's south side theatre field.

"So This is America" Series is Completed

Having completed all twelve subjects in the series of "So This is America'" Comedy Travels for the Educational Department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Arvid E. Gillstrom, the director; Jack Gardner, who is featured in the pictures, returned this week to New York City. The first of the series, the subtitles of which were written by Ring W. Lardner, the famous humorist, probably will be released next month. The rest will be released on a basis of one a month.

The pictures, which are one reel in length, show the adventures of a young man in various parts of the country, and have the combined advantage of being educational as well as decidedly entertaining.

Big Drive Planned for Blackton Feature

Convinced that "My Husband's Other Wife" is one of the finest pictures ever produced by J. Stuart Blackton, Pathe will make a strong drive on the attraction when it is released on January 4th. A most unusual line of advertising has been prepared on the production, and the campaign material accompanying it sets a new standard in the motion picture exploitation field.

Built around the life of a great actress, who, listening to public gossip, feels her surgeon-husband is profiting through her name, and not by his own ability, "My Husband's Other Wife" gives a true insight into life back of the stage.

Last Scenes Under Way of "Wife's Money"

Rapid progress is being made in the production of Eugene O'Brien's latest Selznick picture, "His Wife's Money," at the Fort Lee Studios. The final scenes are well under way, under the direction of Ralph Ince.

Unusually spacious and elaborate settings have been used throughout the picture, among them a replica of a handsome hunting lodge located on Saranac Lake, and a large ball room done in the modern style of decoration, which is the background for several of the most dramatic moments of the story.

Zena Keefe, Selznick's 1920 star, is leading woman for Mr. O'Brien, and has a clever role which she plays with great charm and daintiness.

"His Wife's Money" was written by Ouida Bergere, and gives Eugene O'Brien a role far removed from his previous Selznick pictures. As Richard Flint, an ambitious and serious minded man married to a gay and frivolous wife, Mr. O'Brien gives a remarkable characterization of strength and dramatic power.

Miss Keefe wears beautiful gowns which were designed for her by a famous French modiste.

The supporting cast is excellent, including Cyril Chadwick, eminent English actor, as James Cardwell, Louise Prussing as Eva Uppington, and Ned Hay as Bob Uppington.

Title Apropos of Times Given Rogers' Film

After a long list of possible titles had been considered for the coming Will Rogers Goldwyn picture, an adaptation of W. R. Lighton's Saturday Evening Post story, "Billy Fortune and the Hard Proposition," Samuel Goldwyn and other officials of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation decided to call the production "Water, Water, Everywhere." This title received a unanimous vote of approval because of its timeliness and its suitability to this particular Billy Fortune story.

The date of release of this humorous creation, which provides an excellent opportunity for Rogers to display his gifts as a comedian and an interpreter of character, has not yet been determined.

Years of Publicity Aids Series

Fourteen Years in Which Hallroom Boys Series Has Been in Cartoon Form Aids Films

THE full benefit of more than fourteen years of publicity is in a large measure responsible for the marked success of the series of Hall Room Boys Comedies being distributed by Jack and Harry Cohn.

For that length of time, in upward of 100 newspapers throughout the United States, a cartoon strip created by H. A. MacGill has depicted the activities of these two boys.

The brothers have announced that all territory in the United States has now been contracted for with the exception of Louisiana and Mississippi.

Exhibitors everywhere, according to letters and wires which have come to the New York offices of the Cohns, like the Hall Room releases.

Hall Room Boys comedies are released every two weeks, only, however, after the productions as completed in the studios of the National Film Corporation at Hollywood has been given thorough inspection and editing at the New York offices.

"We are constantly seeking to improve every feature of production," the Cohns have declared. "Better stories as well as a better quality of production are only necessary to make them even more successful than they have been."

Practically every territory in which exchanges have taken over the bookings of the Hall Room series, has come through strong for the comedies, and the result is that there is a constant demand for them.

Tower Film Offers Second Chaplin Reissue

Tower Film Corporation reports that their second Charlie Chaplin special, "Lord Helpus," formerly entitled "Cruel, Cruel Love," which has now been entirely re-edited, retitled and reconstructed, will be ready for release within a week or ten days.

This Charlie Chaplin Special will be sold on the State Rights market and promises to be as great a drawing card for exchangemen and exhibitors as "Some Nerve," the first of this series.

Harry Depp and Teddy Sampson are appearing in a new Supreme Comedy, titled "Are Honeymoons Happy?" which is being produced under the direction of William Beaudine for Robertson-Cole.

Second Allgood Serial Coming

"The Whirlwind," Featuring Chas. Hutchinson, Is Said to Rival "Great Gamble" in Thrills

A FIFTEEN episode serial, announced as the most pretentious the company has yet produced, is forthcoming from the Allgood Picture Corporation in the near future, according to A. Alperstein, General Manager. "The Whirlwind" is the title of the production, and Charles Hutchinson, noted for his dare devil and athletic feats in previous serials, is featured. Joseph A. Golden is credited with the direction and authorship.

Advance reports from the Allgood offices are to the effect that the new serial will in reality be a fast moving production, crammed with genuine thrills. In addition scenic beauty has been sought by the producers, and some exceptional shots obtained, it is said. Several trips were made to Ausable Chasm, a New York State beauty spot, to obtain these effects.

Listed among the stunts performed by Hutchinson in the course of the picture are many claimed to have been exceptionally hazardous. In one episode the player crawls under a train of rapidly moving cars. Other feats are said to be on a par and the serial throughout to present thrilling action.

It will be recalled that Allgood Pictures under the direction of Mr. Golden produced "The Great Gamble" serial, which is said to be in demand of exhibitors in all sections of the country and to be achieving great box-office success. Even bigger things are promised of "The Whirlwind" by Mr. Alperstein and Golden.

In brief the story is said to be of the mystery type dealing with stolen papers and a fortune spirited away by a gang of international crooks. Metropolitan atmosphere is attained by many shots in and around New York City. The love interest is said to be supported throughout. Miss Edith Thornton is in the leading feminine role.

A big line of exploitation accessories has been prepared by the Allgood company together with posters depicting the big moments of the story.

Hampton Production Features Theatre Anniversary

Benjamin B. Hampton's first Great Authors production, "The Westerners," by Stewart Edward White, was Managing Director Albert J. Moeller's big anniversary week attraction at the Theatre De Luxe, Detroit's appropriately-named picture playhouse, the opening of which one year ago proved an event of more than passing attention in film circles at the Michigan metropolis. And Mr. Moeller, who has succeeded beyond the expectations of the Theatre De Luxe Company, comprising several of Detroit's most representative citizens, left nothing undone to make the theatre's first birthday celebration one long to be remembered by the De Luxe clientele.

"Spirit of Dance" in Issu of Pathe Review

The eagerly awaited series of dances b ing produced by Julian Ollendorff, the po ular New York illustrator for the Patl Review, will be inaugurated on Januar 18th, when the Review will celebrate it first anniversary. "The Spirit of th Dance," as the series is shown, will trac the art of terpsichore down through th ages, beginning with the graceful evolutio of eternal Eve and ending with the mos modern dances.

Mme. Desiree Lubovaka, one of the fore most interpreters of the classical dances impersonates "Eve"; Pat Rooney, son o the comedian-dancer of a generation ago with the assistance of Lillian Fermoyle, a member of his vaudeville act, interpret th Jazz in the anniversary number.

Short Subjects Growing in Demand Says Pathe

Pathe offices report the rapidly growing popularity in short subjects as screen features shown through the enormous increase in bookings throughout the country. The exhibitors are quickly realizing that these pictures are not only necessary to their program as "fillers," but that the motion picture fans look forward to seeing them with as much interest as the featured production. The short subjects referred to are The Pathe News, Pathe Reeview and Topics of the Day, and exhibitors are rapidly waking up to the fact that their programs are not complete without them.

Brilliant Program for Coming Convention S. M. P. E.

One month has now passed since the Pittsburgh convention of The Society of Motion Picture Engineers. That leaves five months to the Spring convention at Toronto and only three months before the papers for that meeting should be in our hands in order to have advance copies printed and distributed. Three months at the very busiest season of the year is a mighty short time—only twelve weeks. We must all, therefore, put very strenuous efforts into our work. Upon the papers committee depends, to a very great extent, the success or failure of the coming convention. A careful study of the personal dictionary of each member of the committee in no case reveals any such word as failure.

A thorough knowledge of what has been done so far will assist us and partially offset the disadvantage of not being able to hold regular meetings, on account of geographical separation of the members. Your chairman, therefore takes pleasure in recording the good work of the committee to date as follows:

We have received definite promises of the following papers for the Spring convention.

1. Film Tinting and Densities, by Mr. G. A. Blair, of the Eastman Kodak Company. Mr. Blair is now on a trip to the Pacific Coast and we have no doubt is profitably employing much of the time he has to spend travelling, in preparing his paper.

2. Design of Theatres and Studios, by Mr. W. T. Braun. Mr. R. P. Burrows is actively following this matter and "Bob" never lets anyone fall down on a promise.

3. Studio Lighting, by Mr. W. C. Hubbard of the Cooper Hewitt Electric Co. We haven't heard from Mr. Hubbard since he made his promise in Pittsburgh, but he will hear from us with increasing frequency until the paper is ready.

4. The Design of Gasoline Electric Sets for Motion Picture Work, by R. L. Lee Domestic Engineering Company. Mr. Lee writes as recently as November 13 regarding his paper, so we know he is right on the job.

5. A Continuation of the paper and demonstration of the use of color given us in Pittsburgh by Messrs. Max Mayer and William Kelley. No later word has been received from either but the saying is "silence means consent," so we shall continue to remind them that we want the paper in twelve weeks.

6. Small Gasoline generator sets for Motion Picture Machines, by W. H. Rabell, of the Independent Movie Supply Co. Mr. Rabell learned of Mr. Lee's paper and suggested withdrawing his. From what we know of the subject matter of each paper we do not anticipate any duplication and are therefore trying to get Mr. Rabell to reconsider his withdrawal suggestion.

7. Projection Speed and its effects, by F. H. Richardson.

Besides these definitely promised papers we have conditional promises for the following:

8. Studio Methods, by W. R. Rothaker; Rob Burrows again on the trail.

9. A new High Speed Intermittent, by W. B. Cook, of the Pathescope Co. Mr. Cook does not hesitate to brave the dangers of a trip to France, but seems a little hesitant about Canada. However, we shall assure him safe conduct in return for his paper.

10. New Developments in Motion Picture Equipment, by C. A. B. Halverson, of the General Electric Co. "Hal" has been spending money like a drunken sailor and has produced some great stuff!

11. The Application of Mazda Lamps to Small projectors, by H. H. Madgsick, of the National Lamp Works. We understand some wonderful new lamps have been developed nearly doubling previous screen intensities. Rumors also are about re a new condenser, so this paper should be interesting.

12. A Continuation of Dr. W. E. Story's talk on photoelectric method of comparing condensers.

Not being content with the above, the papers committee is endeavoring to secure material on the following with the authors mentioned as possibilities.

13. Aspheric condensers—Herman Kellmer, of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company.

14. Late Progress in Photography—Carl Gregory.

15. Educational Possibilities of the Motion Picture, by B. E. Norrish, of Canada.

16. Fire Risks in Theatres, Studios and Laboratories. Mr. Loomis, of the Eastman Kodak Company.

17. Motion Picture Work in China, by W. M. States, of General Electric Co., Shanghai, China.

That looks like a long program, but we know our President can arrange a schedule of definite hours for the presentation of each paper and limit the discussions, so that they will go through with snap and on time.

The papers committee is not limiting its activities to mere correspondence re papers. We have other irons in the fire.

Burrows has classified our entire membership and is studying past contributions to see what phases of the industry have contributed and what have not. The latter will be urged to do so in order that our transactions may contain well balanced information on the entire industry.

Max Mayer is studying the transactions of some of the other societies, particularly the Illuminating Engineering Society, to pick out authors and subjects of interest to that Society as well as ours. Theatre Lighting, for example—this wtih a view of arranging a joint paper or exchanging speakers.

Some of the other technical Societies render a progress report at each convention covering extracts from the press, personal reports and general information from any source covering the advance of the art since the last convention. It is some job for one man or even one committee to compile such data, but it is very interesting and exceedingly valuable transaction material. We are working on a plan to have each of the various committees do this work for the particular phase of the industry in which they are interested.

We are also analyzing our transaction and prospective papers for possible material for educational purposes.

Your chairman takes this occasion to thank you for your splendid co-operation to date—to urge even greater efforts during the coming months. A monthly summary of what each member of the committee has accomplished would be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

L. C. Porter, Chairman, Papers Committee.

Portable Power Plants

MR. EUGENE KRETZINGER, Chestnut, Ill., an authority on electrical equipment and especially individual lighting plants, says:

"An ideal installation (for motion picture work) can be obtained by the use of a 1 kw., 32-volt plant of a 160 amp. hr. storage battery. This would be ideal where one was using a 900 watt Mazda lamp. It would be a simple matter to regulate the voltage at 30 volts, having the assurance that the voltage would be constant, thus giving you the full life of your lamps.

Where a portable installation is wanted, a 60-volt, 4 kw. set could be used. Or a 110-volt, 4 kw. could be used where one wanted to run fans or other apparatus requiring standard voltage. Of course, the 60-volt plant would be the most efficient to use.

Questions and Answers

Will a flat black border around the screen completely hide the picture where it overlaps?

Answer:—Yes, if you haven't such a border on your screen at present, see that it is painted on at once. Besides eliminating the apparent sized motion of the picture such a mat produces a contrast between picture and nearby furnishings. Make the border about three inches inside the limit of your picture.

O. E. H.:—

How can I keep emulsion from sticking on tension springs?

Answer:—Either by waxing with a patented waxing machine, or if you are screening first run film exclusively, by sticking thin strips of leather on the springs as described some weeks ago in the News. Some projectionists do neither of these things, but instead pay more attention to the actual conditons of the tension springs themselves, going over their surfaces with a smooth rag on which has been sprinkled a few drops—a very few—of lubricating oil. This is in effect the same as waxing the film except that the cloth will clean off any particles of emulsion already deposited.

E. G., No. 710:—

The Baird is my favorite machine. Why don't we ever see it advertised? Is it going off the market or what?

Answer:—Those are questions that the executives of the Baird Company can best answer. It is true that the machine is not being advertised, but why not, we cannot say.

G. J. H., No. 712:—

I have a brown spot in the center of my picture sometimes ,but only when carbons are far apart. My throw is 118 feet, I use D. C., and my condenser combination is 7½ rear and 9½ front. What is the remedy?

Answer:—Your brown spot is probably due to the light giving craters of your carbons being thrown out of line when allowed to get too far apart. Although you will always be troubled in this way if the carbons are fed only seldom the extent of the brown spot can be lessened perhaps by changing your condenser combination to a 6½ and 7½ or two 7½'s.

Your question is lacking in too many details for us to give a more complete answer. We should have a better idea of current used, size of carbons, kind of carbons set, distance from aperture to condensers, etc. But try changing your condenser combination and see if you don't get some help.

N. J. B., New York City:—

What is the meaning of Dioptre as used in optics? In reading some articles on lenses I have often noticed this word. The author did not explain its meaning, so I thought it must be a common term for opticians.

Reply:—The Dioptre is the "unit of power" of a lens. A lens having a dioptric strength of 1, has a focal length of one meter. Then lenses having focal lengths of 2, 3 and 4 meters have dioptric strengths of 1/2, 1/3 and 1/4 dioptres.

The magnifying action of a lens is "stronger" as the focal length grows shorter. If the focal length becomes infinitesimally long the lens becomes a flat disk and the strength or power is zero. Therefore the focal length divided by 1 is called the "Power" of the lens.

R. J. N., St. Petersburgh, Fla.:—

What is the right size of picture for a throw of 72 feet, and what would be best for a screen—a gold fibre or aluminum?

Reply:—Although you haven't given us as much data as we would like to have we will make a few assumptions and then go on.

First, the size of picture should not be determined by the throw, but by the size and shape of the theatre. While we do not believe it to be so in your case, it is often the case that the projection room is placed at the front of the balcony where almost horizontal projection is possible, instead of up under the eaves. Thus while the throw may be but 70 feet, the distance from rear seat to screen may be 150 feet.

There is also another factor in screen size. How far from the front row of seats will the screen be placed? If the distance is short the screen must be small, otherwise the patrons in the first dozen rows will get an exaggerated picture which will compel them to shift their eyes continually over a wide area. This is one of the best methods of causing eye strain and fatigue.

Let us assume, then, that it is at least 25 feet from screen to first row, and that your projection room is at the very rear of the house. Under these conditions a screen 12 to 14 feet in width is large enough. With this size of surface the features of players will not appear super-men in size; those patrons who select the front rows will be able to enjoy the picture, and those in the rear of the house will still see something larger than a postage stamp where the screen ought to be.

The choice of screens must be left to you and the screen makers. In these columns we cannot recommend one article over others. Get in touch with any of the makers of the screens, explaining your conditions, size of house, picture size, throw, etc., and then make your own decision from the reports.

The Cure for Dark Aisles

THERE has always been a demand for some sort of lighting system for the dark aisles of motion picture theatres. Usually the practice has assumed either one of two aspects. The patron may have been led down to the front seat by an usher with a small flash light with a proverbial tendency to throw the beam everywhere expect where required, or he may have been turned loose at the head of the aisle with an injunction to "Take a seat anywhere." Under this condition he usually does. The "anywhere" may be in some one's lap, or in the center of the aisle, according to his luck and persistency. Either method of illumination is wrong.

In the first place, the use of a flash light is in itself an admission of inadequacy in illumination. Flash lights give the impression of a dark, gloomy dismal, uncertain passages, where one must thread with care lest a slight misstep mean a plunge forward in the dark.

The Aislelite

Why, then, did not some firm think of an aisle lighting scheme long before this? At any rate, it seemed to be up to the Brookins Company to place on the market the first real lighting equipment for this purpose.

As the illustration shows the Aislelite is a neat and well-designed metal hood containing an incandescent lamp with an aperture so arranged as to throw light rays where needed.

In the ordinary theatre with level or slightly stepped floor the Aislelites are attached under the arm rest of the end seat of every fifth or sixth row. Where the slope is considerable such as would occur in a steep balcony, the distance apart should be lessened to each third or fourth row.

The necessary wiring is placed in conduits so as to give adequate protection. A bulb of small wattage gives the required illumination and holds power consumption to a minimum.

A large number of installations have been made, and in every case the management are wondering how they countenanced dark and unsafe aisles before the use of the Aislelites.

An N. A. M. L. Journal Suggested

SOME days ago we received a communication from one of the members of the League, suggesting some sort of a journal for those belonging to the association. Just what kind of a publication this was to be we could not be sure from the first letter, so we replied asking for more details. Mr. Fuller immediately wrote again elaborating his idea. It is printed here to see what others think of his scheme. If you have a few thoughts on the subject send them in. Before we take any step we wish to hear from members in all parts of the country.

My Dear Mr. Bragdon: I have received your letter of the 6th inst. Was certainly glad that my suggestion was given such courteous attention. Although I am comparatively a new member of the N. A. M. L., I have made it a rule to inspect all films before showing for the past seven years, and, putting it in the best condition possible, therefore I have really been a member all the time.

Now for the "journal idea." It is a settled fact in my mind that unless we (the members of the N. A. M. L.) boost the N. A. M. L. as an organization of the greatest benefits that any league could possibly render to the projectionist (as well as the public, etc.), it would never be very strong. And I feel that a journal of letters from members telling of the benefits that they have reaped from the League would be one of the best ways of keeping our names and activities before the eyes of the ever-watchful public, and the monster of them all, the exchanges. Now if all projectionists were members of the N. A. M. L. we would not have to look forward to receiving film which has been entirely at the mercy of the exchange inspectors. And again I know there are lots of projectionists who would be glad to pay the subscription price of such a publication just to hear of the activities of their brother projectionists. And I have no doubt but that every N. A. M. L. member would subscribe. I have communicated with a member of the League who lives in Douglas, Ga., and have put my suggestion before him and same met his approval. He furthermore stated that he would not only be glad to subscribe to the journal, but would assist in its publication by doing anything in his power to help put the N. A. M. L. "over the top." I believe it will go "over the top" 100 strong. But not until we let "operators" who are not members of the N. A. M. L. know that we intend to go to the extreme to make this the strongest organization of its kind. And I think that a journal would stimulate interest in the members of the League. If we should get such a journal I intend (after reading mine) sending it to some projectionist who is not a member. Don't you think he would be interested enough to inquire further into such a League that would go to the trouble of sending him one of its journals, therefore finally bringing about his enrollment in the N. A. M. L.

No doubt but that I have written too much already, but I want to second the motion on the suggestion of the listing of the names of the members of the N. A. M. L. There are several members who would write a friendly letter to them "every now and then," thereby getting better acquainted and exchanging ideas would naturally increase his knowledge of his profession.

"Last but not least," I ask you to excuse the condition of this letter, as I just can't keep my fingers off the wrong keys, and besides I am a projectionist and not a stenographer.

Just one more question, Mr. Bragdon: "Do we have any large city projectionists members of the N. A. M. L.?" And about how many, please?

Hoping to hear your opinion of the journal suggestion in the next issue of the NEWS, I beg to remain

Very sincerely yours, JOHN E. FULLER,
Projectionist, Lyric Theatre, Forney, Texas.

Comment:—You don't have to excuse the condition of your typewriting. The worst typewriting is so much easier to read and understand than the average handwriting that your letter was a pleasure to read.

Am sorry to say that your question as to city and country members of the N. A. M. L. cannot be answered just now. We have never listed them under these two headings. However, we are certain that a commendable proportion of the members are from so-called big cities. Some day we are going to print a listing of the members by States and perhaps by cities. In some of the latter we know that projectionists are 100 per cent. N. A. M. L. members. Sounds pretty good, doesn't it?

Back from the Army

I know you think I am dead, but am not, for I am still on two legs in a Motion Picture Booth, and always will be, I guess at least in the same business.

The reason you have failed to hear from me before is that I've been in the Army until recently, and upon being discharged came here, and am now working at the Colonial and Liberty theatres, also have charge of the Opera House Booth, all owned by the Phoenix Amusement Company, of Lexington, Ky.

Am leaving here November 1 for Elwood, Kan., where I will have charge of the Palace Gem Projection owned by W. P. Rousel.

Kindly send me a blank to fill out so that you will have a better record of me. Also some labels as I am nearly out of them.

Reply:—Glad to see you back. Within a few weeks you will have become so familiar with the "old game" that you will forget you ever left it.

A new supply of labels are going forward to you under separate cover together with a button. We have no extra labels, but you may cut one out from a recent issue of the NEWS and send it in, being sure that you mark your membership number on it so you won't get another one.

CAMERA

Close-Up Work

By William Barbarin Laub

IN the making of motion pictures in the studios of America but one focal length lens is generally used for all kinds of work, namely, a two-inch lens. The width of the angle obtained with such a lens is in many ways a most convenient one; enabling one to place the camera in a convenient position in relation to the lights used for scene illumination and in addition, its depth strikes a happy medium between the longer focal length lens and the wide angle, or short focal length lens.

Because of the fact that a two-inch lens is more or less of a "happy medium" as we might say, cameras on which only one lens can be mounted at a time are almost always equipped with this size lens and the longer focal length lens is never substituted for it unless the photographer finds himself in a position where he must "draw" his object or subject to him. There are times of course when it is inconvenient to place a camera within three or four feet of a subject that we want in great detail and then a three-inch or even longer focal length lens is very desirable. We have in mind the making of wild animal pictures perhaps. But of course there are other times when it is far easier to "shoot" from a distance in making a "close-up," when the longer focal length lens comes in handy. Another reason why cameramen seldom change lenses and take the close-up from the same "set-up" the long shot has been made from is that directors do not always want the far different effect that the lens of longer focal length will give. In other words, when using a three inch lens in making a close-up, naturally we don't get as much depth of focus as with a two-inch lens and the result is a soft out-of-focus background that we would not have to the same extent in using the shorter length lens. On the other hand, there are many who prefer this effect in close-ups and it is not only achieved with the longer focal length lens, but the lens is also thrown slightly out of focus in many cases, giving us the soft-focus effect so often seen of late.

It still seems to be questionable though in the minds of many that this effect is desirable or that it is true to the whole picture illusion; certainly it has been abused.

The B. & H. Camera is fitted with mountings on a revolving turret for three lenses, making it very convenient to shift from one to the other. But it is impossible to do this while actually taking pictures. It is a matter of two or three second's work.

"STOPS"

American motion pictures certainly are faultless in many cases so far as sharpness and clearness of photography is concerned, but we believe that this is due largely to the universal use of a very superior film-stock as well as to our clear and bright "picture" weather. For it is seldom that exterior work is done unless the light conditions are nearly perfect and we can afford to await such days in most sections of the country. Of course the brilliancy of our light varies in different sections; the light in California, for instance, generally being more intense than in the eastern states. In the higher altitudes of the west, on a bright day, one will generally be able to "stopdown" a lens to f-16 and even further, whereas in the east at the same time of the year and under the same conditions one might be "working" at perhaps f-11.

No doubt, in Europe, the motion picture photographer would find in many regions as ideal working conditions as we have in California and other sections of the United States for certainly, we have seen very beautiful photography in travelogue pictures made in Europe. On the other hand, the chances are that the low-land countries suffer atmospheric conditions that are never duplicated here and as a result cinematographers cannot overcome the handicap nature has thrust upon them.

Laboratory of Film Developing Corporation an Interesting Sight

ON the west shore of the Hudson not far from the center of Hoboken the laboratory of the Film Developing Corporation is running at full blast. This laboratory under the direction of Messrs. Houdini, Hardeen and Davidson has forged ahead by its production of work of high quality until it occupies a position as one of the leaders in fine film development.

Although the interior of all laboratories are much the same as far as equipment and procedia are concerned, the Film Developing laboratory offers some refinements in these respects. Particularly impressive is the roominess of the separate departments. Instead of having many machines in a close space with little room for expansion, there is plenty of space in every direction.

In the printing room, for instance, there is room for 15 to 20 printing machines, and a like amount of spaciousness is found in the perforating department. Three projectors, two Simplexes and a Baird, are used to prove each foot of film before being sent out.

But probably the most interesting parts of the Film Developing plant are the automatic developing machines. There are three of these automatics, a small negative machine and two mammoth positive machines. Through the use of these machines, it is possible to pass films from printing machines through the various developing and drying processes without being touched by the human hands. The drying drums are totally inclosed and are fed with perfectly conditioned air.

In personnel the laboratory is especially fortunate in having workers long experienced in the handling of film. Superintendent Flosse has been identified with laboratory practice for many years. Mr. Joseph Leighton is an expert negative developer. Miss Madelaine Keough is floor lady, and Miss Sohns is in charge of the printing department.

The Film Developing plant has been laid out for an ultimate capacity of 1,500,000 feet weekly.

More About Punch Holes

ROBERT TEESON, Camas, Wash.:

I suppose you will be quite surprised to get a letter from this part of the world because this is my first offense.

I am a constant readers of the News and have been very interested in this scrap over the punch holes and between the big town operator and the little one. (I had better say right here that I am one of the little ones in a town of 1,100 people.) I have stayed out of this scrap altogether until I read Mr. L. Garvin's letter in the September 20 issue of the News. After reading that I had to say something. Mr. Garvin sure has the right idea about the little operator getting the blame for the big one. His letter reminded me of a couple of little cases of trouble that I had.

We got a show from an exchange in Seattle which was almost a new picture. After our showing we shipped it to a show in Portland for its second run. Before sending it to this theatre I took out four misframes and rewound the whole show ready for use. Well, in about a week we got a letter from the exchange, inclosing about three feet of film all chewed up. They said about 300 feet of the returned show was ruined and wanted us to pay 20 cents a foot for it.

Another time I was in the booth of one of the biggest theatres in Portland, and I saw the operator punch the tail end of each reel for about 15 or 20 feet back. I told him he didn't seem to care how many holes he punched. He says: "What is it to me? I only have to run them for two days."

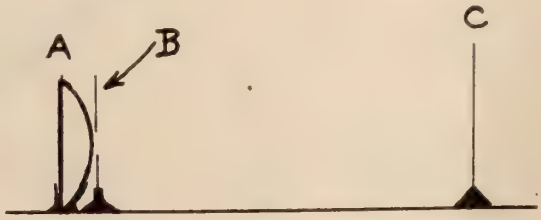
I got a film a short time ago that had just had its first run in Portland and when showing it I had a hard time keeping it on the sprockets, but when investigating it I found 12 splices made with one-half-inch lays and in most of them the sprocket holes did not even match. I don't know whether it was done at the exchange or the booth, but whoever did I would like to give him a lesson in splicing.

How to Measure Condensers

Is there any way of measuring focal length of condensers? Some we get from supply houses are thin but are marked the same focal length as the thicker one.

Reply: There surely is a way to measure the focal length of condensers and the test can be carried out without expensive apparatus. Find some means to hold the condenser upright and steady. Then take a piece of pasteboard and cut from its center a hole about ⅜-in. in diameter. Make the same kind of arrangement with the pasteboard as you did with the condenser so that it will stand in any position without wabbling. Arrange the condenser and pasteboard mask as shown in this sketch.



A = Condenser
B = Mask with ¾" hole
C = Focusing Screen

Take the whole equipment to an open window where a building or a tree is visible several hundred feet away. Be sure that the plano-surface of the condenser is toward the distant object. Place the cardboard mask close up to the condenser so that the hole in the mask is in line with the "peak" of the condenser surface. Finally move the screen until the distant object is brought to a sharp focus. The distance measured from the cardboard to the screen is the focal length of the lens.

Results thus arrived at should agree with the focal length as determined by the maker who uses a mathematical formula, in which the index of the class is used as one factor.

"Mutt and Jeff in Iceland"

(Bud Fisher Cartoon—Fox)

MUTT and Jeff are traveling again. Whatever possessed them to go to Iceland no one is able to find out. But the freaks are capable of doing most anything. And presumably Iceland is just as attractive to them as Paris. They are working for science here for it is their object to catch the Aurora Borealis with the aid of the camera. The cartoon gets off to a laughable start, for snow flakes are falling rapidly and the freaks are just rising from their slumber. No eskimo snow house for them; they sleep right out in the open. A huge penguin, who shimmies when he walks, endeavors to make their acquaintance and Jeff believes it to be the Borealis. They are just about to turn the crank on the bird when he flies to a rocky ledge.

Here it is Mutt shows remarkable courage. He makes a bridge of his body so that the little partner can take a close-up. But the penguin is an elusive thing and flies away. Mutt attaches a rope to his body and asks Jeff to lower him within camera distance of the bird. Jeff lowers him all right and then forgets that the camera has no film in it. So the tall fellow takes an icy bath. Three plunges does he take because of Jeff's absent-mindedness. What does Mutt amount to when science calls? The little man chases the bird into a cave and comes out dragging a huge polar bear. By this time he thinks of Mutt's predicament. Hauling him to the top he finds his "sidekick" thoroughly caked in ice up to his long and skinny neck. The ice is broken around his arms and Mutt gives chase using the ice around his legs for a sled. And when he catches Jeff he gives him a tremendous blow on the head. And so the little fellow counts stars, and yells—"Camera! I see the Aurora Borealis." A very comical cartoon—the funniest one in several weeks. The bird is a rare one. Mutt and Jeff should sign him up.—LAURENCE REID.

"Capt. Kidd's Kids"

(Harold Lloyd Comedy—Two Reels—Pathe)

HAROLD LLOYD is certainly carrying a beacon light and showing the way to his contemporaries when it comes to original methods. He has the neatest bag of tricks in his repertory than all the other mirth provokers combined; with one exception. It is not so much that his burlesques are new, but that he has a way of making them appear novel and up-to-date. No employment of trick photography does he countenance nor any freakish methods of make-up. Equipped with his tortise-shell glasses and relying only on his own strong sense of humor he scores easily, surely and humorously. His burlesques are always interesting because he gets away from the beaten path and presents them without the aid of a menangerie or slapstick accoutrements. Some of this credit must be given Hal Roach the man at the helm. Granted that Mr. Lloyd is original and a genuine fun-maker, his subjects would not be so spontaneous with humor if the guiding hand of Mr. Roach was not there to point the way.

"Capt. Kidd's Kids" is a two-reel comedy which takes advantage of the dream situation. His sweetheart, Bebe Daniels, is about to sail for the South Sea Islands. She calls him up, but her mother finishes the conversation, and Harold's courtship at the same time. Our hero in the meanwhile has just awakened from a severe "hangover" acquired from his farewell bachelor dinner. The scenes attendant upon this part of the story are as funny as Lloyd has ever shown us. Snube Pollard is the foil as usual, and being the valet, it is his duty to take everything that comes his way. And his walrus-like expression is both pathetic and funny. Harold goes back to sleep and dreams. And what a dream!

He is on the briny deep with Snubs and a dog and the swimming is very difficult, especially when the mongrel has the life-preserver. A pirate ship hove into sight and manned entirely by pretty buccaneers. And it doesn't take the swimmers long to reach the life-boat. Once on deck and Harold has the time of his life. These pirates could rob the navies of the world so pretty are they and so becomingly costumed. Middy blouses, athletic trunks, and bare knees and short boots—they are "straws" to a drowning man. When Harold whips single-handed the real pirates who are prisoners in the fo-cas'le he wakes up and finds that he is really on the same boat with Bebe. And he gives her mother a piece of his mind. And she realizes that he is masterful enough for her daughter. A clever comedy, and one full of action and adventure and color and atmosphere.—LAWRENCE RAID.

"A Woman in Grey"

(A Fifteen-Episode Serico Serial, Starring Arline Pretty)

THE customary ingredients considered necessary to render a chapter-picture an interesting source of entertainment are found liberally scattered throughout the first five episodes of "A Woman in Grey". Mystery—hidden motives and obscure personages—is the predominating characteristic of this serial. All the factors of the complicated problem are presented in the initial episode, which is appropriately titled "The House of Mystery". In this house a Mrs. Haynes has been found murdered. On the evidence of Mary Edwards, a servant, the adopted daughter of the victim, Florence Haynes, is found guilty of the crime. Florence dies in prison five years later. Mary Edwards disappears.

After a lapse of years, during which the house has been untenanted, Wilfred Amory buys the property and sends his secretary, Tom Thurston, to inspect the premises preparatory to moving in. Tom, while pursuing his inspection through the dust-laden rooms, is startled by the presence of a strange woman, posing as a Miss Ruth Hope. Later another mysterious character makes his appearance in the house in the person of Haviland-Hunter. Both these persons are represented as being engaged in a competitive hunt for a missing document, the "Amory Code", which is concealed in the house and which holds the clue to a hidden fortune and, is seems also, to the mystery surrounding the murder of Mrs. Haynes. By the trend of subsequent events, Tom becomes an ally of the mysterious Miss Hope in the struggle for the possession of the "Amory Code", which is unearthed in the early part of the action.

The mystery now becomes a double-horned problem. First, who is this Ruth Hope, the Woman in Grey, and what is her relation to the Haynes murder? Secondly, to what obscure paths and hidden treasure does the 'Amory Code" hold the key? The suspense aroused by these two central elements of the mystery is further intensified by the keen competition of the opposing forces for the possession of the code, which passes from one side to the other in the cross-currents of circumstances. Hunter on his side, of course, is ably abetted in his villainy by a couple of henchmen.

Action, strange events cleverly planned to reinforce the central mystery, and "chance-taking" stunts add to the entertaiment value of the production. Romance, also, with two women set in opposition to win the hero's love, lends a thread of heart-appeal to the other skeins of interest found in the story.

Arline Pretty, in the role of Ruth Hope, fits her part and registers well in moments of action and suspense. Henry G. Sell, in the role of Tom Thurston, gives Miss Pretty creditable support. In several rather strenuous moments during the first five episodes, Mr. Sell is called upon to expend considerable energy—notably in a number of rough-and-tumble encounters with Fred Jones, the heavy. At the beginning, Mr. Sell seems same-what wanting in athletic alertness and thoroughness of action, but he eventually warms up to his work, ad then things begin to happen, "fast and furious", to the opposition forces. Fred Jones, in the role of the mysterious Haviland-Hunter, proves a good heavy in a part that calls for considerable action at various stages.

The story was written by C. N. & A. M. Williamson, and the scenario by Walter Richard Hall. James Vincent directed the production. Altogether, "A Grey Woman" will, in the opinion of the reviewer, supply sufficient thrills and adequate entertainment to the devotees of the serial.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"The Hayseed"

(Paramount-Arbuckle Comedy—Two Reels)

WE cannot remember when Fatty Arbuckle has had a more rollicking comedy than "The Hayseed." The big fun-maker is particularly partial to rural life in his subjects and he has made such a study of it that it seems genuine even though it is richly burlesqued. Fatty himself still takes the role of a humorous half-wit and that he is an artist of the first order can not be denied in the easy assurance which marks his performance. He is the rural mail carrier here and he shoots the letters in the mail boxes with quickness and despatch. One of the humorous highspots of his tricks is when he orders a suit of clothes from a Chicago mail order house. The measurement is called off in automobile terms. It arrives and also a glass sparkler which Fatty is going to give his girl. But on reaching her house he discovers the crooked sheriff has been there for the same purpose. The latter has given her a genuine ring purchased with stolen money from the post-office.

And so it goes building from one comical point to another. The climax comes in a "shindig" conceived and executed in typical rural style. Someone recites, another performs conjuring tricks, and Fatty comes out himself and bursts into song. To make his voice strong he eats onions. When the ballad is finished (one of those heart "depressers") the sheriff accuses him of theft. But no one can get near him on account of his breath. But it all ends well when he asks his girl to eat just one onion, which will equalize the fifty he has eaten. So they are able to embrace. There is a laugh in every turn of the camera and what is more it is not gained by slapstick methods. Every player works quietly but scores his points beyond a doubt. Al. St. John is the skinny sheriff and he is as funny as ever. And Fatty Arbuckle still has that intelligent dog. "The Hayseed" will make an undertaker laugh and bring chuckles from a grouch. It is good enough to be featured.—LAURENCE REID.

"Tulagi" and "New Hebrides"

Two Single Reel Martin Johnson Pictures Through Robertson-Cole)

"THROUGH the Isles of the New Hebrides" and "Tulagi—A White Spot in a Black Land," are two very interesting reels in Martin Johnson's new series, "On The Borderland of Civilization," being distributed by the Robertson-Cole organization.

The tropical scenery is beautiful and the savages, almost nude, look vicious enough to bring to the spectator the realization that the daring explorers, Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson, are constantly risking their lives that civilization may have knowledge of the wild and weird customs of these black tribes.

We can well believe that cannibals still thrive after witnessing "Through the Isles of the New Hebrides" and "Tulagi" is certainly "A White Spot in a Black Land," as there are only a dozen white persons, comprising the British Government's officials and staff, and surrounded by hundreds of natives who still look a act as if they were but a step away from barbarism.

These Martin Johnson reels are wonderfully instructive as w as highly entertaining and contribute a remarkably strong f of any program.—TOM HAMLIN.

"A Day's Pleasure"

(Charles Chaplin—Two Reels—First National)

IF you do not make the mistake of exploiting the picture heavily this will just about get by. Your sole exploitat should be to place Charlie Chaplin's name and picture in many places as possible and announce this as his newest Fi National picture, "A Days Pleasure."

But if you attempt to eulogize the actual picture itself you w certainly have a lot of explaining to do afterwards. It will dr heavily but will only please mildly. For it does not begin to the Chaplin stride so thoroughly established by "A Dog's Lif and "Shoulder Arms."

And it is even weaker than "Sunnyside." Seasickness on ship and a barrel of tar on land, augmented by the antics of Ford car, afford the nucleus for the alleged comedy contained the scant two-reels.

Summary:—This will undoubtedly register tremendously as box office attraction but will not generally satisfy as a picture. TOM HAMLIN

"EVE IN EXILE"
(AMERICAN-PATHE)

Hamilton Story Offers Entertainment

COSMO HAMILTON, who can be bold and startling when the mood strikes him, offers evidence in his "Eve in Exile," that he is not dependent upon the artificialities of society life as framework for his stories. Indeed he looms up as decidedly human in this tale of love, lust and jealousy, which may be called a study in the quadrangle. The element of simplicity and the human note sounded throughout the picture's length carry it along and make it an interesting contribution to the screen.

Not anything new in screen language has been revealed, but the incidents, the situations have been refurbished by the author so that the offering is made rich in dramatic values. It is a well conceived plot and a well drawn characterization which strikes us as the outstanding merits of the picture and these are made effective through a human and humorous perspective.

So you have an absorbing drama in "Eve in Exile." There are certain irrelevant scenes which might be dispensed with for the sake of sequence and a few superfluous characters could be eliminated for the same reason. The photographic embellishment deserves the highest praise. Charlotte Walker, in the title role, contributes a performance marked for its depth and understanding, while Thomas Santschi and Wheeler Oakman, appearing opposite, are thoroughly in character. PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Eve in Exile," a screen version of Cosmo Hamilton's novel and play of the same name, will be presented at the ——— theatre beginning ——— with Charlotte Walker in the leading role. Mr. Hamilton's work is by no means foreign to the screen. Several of his plays and stories have been picturized and always with considerable success, for, although the author writes the most brilliant sort of dialogue, his plots and his treatment of them possess an originality, a subtle twist that makes them stand in a class by themselves.

"Eve in Exile" deals with a young woman who is exiled with a spinster aunt in a lonely fishing village because her father is unable to provide for her. Here it is that she is wooed by two admirers, John Sheen, a domineering figure whose admiration is guided solely by lust, and Paul Armitage, an author. It is the former and his sister, Mrs. Nina Carey, a young widow, who stoop to discredit Eve in Paul's estimation. The latter, realizing that the attractive stranger has usurped her place in the affections of Paul, takes advantage of the opportunity to represent Eve as an adventuress. Their efforts are fruitless eventually, and after Sheen has severely wounded Paul, Nina confesses that her motive was a purely selfish one.

Mr. Hamilton has developed the plot and characterization in a vivid manner, and at the same time has skillfully incorporated his romantic interest and its attendant conflict. It is a most unusual story based upon a theme of love that is carried along in the flotsam and jetsam of hate, prejudice, pride, jealousy and other base emotions. The roles of the play are all very capably taken. Charlotte Walker in the title role gives an uncommonly good performance. An emotional actress of the first order, she delineates the role with power and feeling.

CATCH LINES

From a fashionable world she was exiled to a lonely village. And because she had poise and education the natives scoffed at her. What happened? See "Eve in Exile."

Two men loved her—one with bestial passion, the other with the pure passion of the heart. See "Eve in Exile"—a picture of a dramatic romance.

A vital, vivid story is "Eve in Exile," by Cosmo Hamilton. See it enacted on the screen by Charlotte Walker. A tale of love and hate, passion and prejudice.

PROGRAM READER

Cosmo Hamilton, author of many stories, contributed the play, "Eve in Exile," which has been adapted to the screen with admirable success. It will appear at this theatre very shortly with Charlotte Walker as the star. Followers of Mr. Hamilton's career will be delighted with this announcement. Several of his plays and stories have found their way to the screen, a notable one being "Scandal," in which Constance Talmadge starred. The plot of "Eve in Exile" deals with a young woman who has been forced into exile with an aunt who holds a narrow outlook on life. From her father's fashionable world she takes up her abode in a small coast village, and finds that her love for adventure is still able to express itself. How she discovers romance—a romance that is mighty near a tragedy for her—how she changes the viewpoint of her associates, are events that compose a most unusual story and one rich in plot and characterization. The situations are handled in expert style by the author, director and players. You will enjoy the picture immensely.

"JUBILO"
(GOLDWYN)

Will Rogers Scores in Charming Picture

IN one of the most charming photoplays we have seen in a long time Will Rogers thoroughly establishes himself as a screen star of the first magnitude. This picture just naturally reaches out and takes hold of your heart strings. And it keeps you enchanted to the very end. A well balanced cast of perfect types artistically portray the various roles.

The story is a simple one of humor and pathos. In spite of the train robbery, the shooting, and two rattling good fights, it could never be truthfully branded a melodrama. The suspense, the quaint characterization of the roving hobo, the neat little love element, the clever sub-titles, all contribute in planting the strong sympathetic appeal in this picture.

A hobo asks a rancher for a meal and is told he must work for it. After seeing the pretty daughter making an appetizing pie he voluntarily breaks the habit of a lifetime and performs his first manual labor. And he stays on the job and becomes a producer until the rancher is safely out of his difficulties, and then marries the girl. It sounds simple, and it is simple,—but it's great. Direction and continuity are above par.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are:—Metropolitan, big puller and greatly pleasing; Elite, strong puller and highly pleasing; Family, big puller and very pleasing; Workers, strong puller and very pleasing.—Length 5 reels.—released December 7.—TOM HAMLIN

Story by Ben Ames Williams.
Scenario by Robert F. Hill.
Direction by Clarence G. Badger.
Photography by Marcel Le Picard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Jubilo," with Will Rogers in the title role, is the screen attraction at the ——— theatre for ——— days, beginning ———.

Ben Ames Williams' story appeared as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post and Goldwyn Pictures secured the screen rights, as they believed the role of the principal character would fit their star like a glove.

And Will Rogers is credited with giving such a masterly characterization of Jubilo that it is declared he has firmly established himself as a screen star of the highest calibre.

When this homely roving hobo was forced to arise from his slumber in the field simply because the sun was shining in his eyes, he is mystified to see a train robbery occur not less than a quarter of a mile away. He noted in particular that the leader of the band rode a black and white horse.

At noon of the same day he applies for a meal at a ranch and is refused unless he works for it. After catching a view of the rancher's pretty daughter making an appetizing pie he breaks the habit and rule of a life time and actually performs manual labor. And then he sees a horse in the barn that he is convinced was used by the leader of the train robbers.

He stays on the job and becomes a producer. There is some excitement around the ranch also. The boss was forced to thrash him one day and on another occasion the hobo administered severe punishment to a young fellow in the nearby town after hearing him talk about the rancher's daughter.

This picture is described as possessing the essential human appeal that is the supreme mark of greatness in a photoplay.

PROGRAM READER

He was just a wanderer. And this was by choice.

His greatest problem was how to keep eating without working.

And then a change came over him after seeing a pretty girl baking a pie.

This hobo's cheerful disposition and singing of "In the Year of Jubilo" earned for him the title of "Jubilo."

Many will remember this great story, written by Ben Ames Williams, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post as a serial.

Goldwyn quickly secured the screen rights because it had the star that fitted the role like a glove.

Will Rogers has the title role in "Jubilo," which will be shown in this theatre all next week. And it is a photoplay that will grip you by its sheer charm.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you must concentrate all your efforts in getting a big opening and you can then depend on the word of mouth praise to keep them coming afterwards. As the story ran as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post very recently, you should feature the title and mention it in every announcement. And of course the author's name, Ben Ames Williams. After they see Will Rogers in this one you can rely on his name to bring them in, but he has not been a screen star long enough to pull heavily until they see a few more like this picture. We would not suggest any freak stunts on this picture. Mention that it is a Goldwyn and reap any benefits that the brand name may bring.

CATCH LINES

How to eat without working was just as hard as how to work without eating.

His only enemy was the sun, which wakened him in his great open air boudoir.

The smile of a pretty girl making an appetizing pie impelled one hobo to break the habit of a lifetime and go to work.

Where a quaint rover settles down and brings pleasure to his neighbors.

"MORE DEADLY THAN THE MALE"
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Ethel Clayton Scores as Polite Vampire

THE strongest thing about this picture is its title and it is attractive enough to lure the passerby, notwithstanding the star's compelling personality. When the action unfolds this same passerby will be interested in the characterization, and how Miss Clayton acquits herself in the role of a polite vampire. It is a pictured contribution, since it smacks of heroes, heroics, and hero-worship and its central idea is founded upon the game of love as it is played by a resourceful man and an equally resourceful woman.

The story doesn't get out of its groove which accounts for a deal of repetitious action. Not that the heroine practises the same methods, but that her general scheme is the same. It is melodramatic up to the finale, then it verges toward a comedy vein. One is never in doubt how the story will end, because the hero once caught is unable to escape. A certain quota of thrills constructed around the male's primitive attitudes and the female's efforts to escape offer up a bit of suspense, but once it is all over you say to yourself, "Where have I seen this story before?"

The interesting part of it is Miss Clayton's perfect study. She interprets the part with a great deal of poise and undersanding. Every gesture, every expression, every mannerism speak volumes for her artistic perceptions. She makes the character actually lifelike—something which cannot be said for it on the printed page unless you use your imagination. Director Vignola has emphasized its high lights and has given it as an artistic mounting. Edward Coxen portrays the hero as he is drawn. Length, 5 Reels. —LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Ethel Clayton will re-appear before local screen patrons when her latest picture, "More Deadly than the Male," is shown at the ——— theatre beginning ———. This marks the first photoplay in which Miss Clayton has been featured for several months, her absence from the screen being explained by the fact that she has but recently returned from an extensive tour of the Orient. This picture presents an exciting melodrama for four reels then it turns into a delightful comedy-drama. The central figure is a high-spirited girl in love with a wealthy clubman, Richard Carlin, who is used to searching the four corners of the globe for adventure. When she urges him to settle down he retorts that there are no thrills in modern civilization. Whereup she sets out to prove him mistaken.

All sorts of incidents in a mountain camp follow. The conservatory has been transformed into a jungle; the clubman fights a duel with the girl's supposed husband; a dam bursts with nearly disastrous results, and finally there is an exciting conflict with the harbor police, at the end of which the hero is brought to consciousness, and agrees to give up his foreign travels. He has learned that exciting experiences can be found at home. The Irish husband turns out to be a brother, so Carlin has a straight road to romance. Miss Clayton enters into the spirit of the role with capable expression and her supporting company is adequate. Director Robert G. Vignola has given the story a smooth production.

CATCH LINES

A story of a clever girl who undertakes to make life interesting for a young man. Does she succeed? See Ethel Clayton in "More Deadly than the Male."

PROGRAM READER

Helen O'Hara was very firm in her opinion that more excitement could be found at home than in foreign travel. Richard Carlin held to the opposite view. He claimed that modern civilization offered nothing in the way of adventure and could always find it in African jungles. Then as he was about to sail for foreign lands Helen undertook to prove that her theory was right. She fitted up her camp as a replica of the jungle and Carlin came and forgot such a country as Africa. Forgot it because Helen gave him an exciting adventure. This is the brief outline of Ethel Clayton's new picture, "More Deadly than the Male," which comes to this theatre in the near future. Take our tip and see this feature. It contains real excitement and romance and humor. It's one of the star's best pictures yet. She makes life interesting for her hero here and she will make it interesting for you, too.

SUGGESTIONS

You can work up clever exploitation with the title of this picture. Everyone is familiar with the specie that is more deadly than the male. So make the most of it in catchlines and teasers. Feature the star and announce her return to the screen after an absence of several months spent in foreign travel. Play it up as a picture which shows the battle between woman's charm and man's strength. Emphasize it as a picture that presents a vivid romance. Tell that the heroine filled his life with such thrills and daring deeds that he forgot all about has desire to travel. Bring out that the star is seen at her best in one of her greatest pictures. Mention the director. He has been responsible for some of the finest achievements of the screen. Use such teasers as this—"A woman can start more excitement than a troop of tigers. If you don't believe it, see Ethel Clayton in "More Deadly than the Male." Use posters and stills.

"THE FEUD"
(FOX)

Mix Puts on the Actor's Mantle Here

OF all the pictures which have been based upon Southern feu none perhaps have come closer to serving up dramatic ente tainment than Tom Mix's new offering, "The Feud." carries all the familiar ingredients—the romance between th children of the rival families, the song of hate sung by the colo ful feudists, a wealth of atmosphere, a deal of conflict and mor More? Yes It goes a step further than most feud tales and pr sents a romance within a romance much after the pattern o "Milestones," and "Maytime." The original lovers never wed but their children meet in later years and their romance culminate in marriage. The respective fathers, however, argue too muc for the feud to seem always genuine. That is only a minor faul in the admirable assortment of dramatic scenes and situations The hero after killing his sweetheart's father flees to the West where he becomes a pioneer. Pathos creeps in here, for he neve hears from his beloved again and in time he marries and forget his sorrow.

An Indian massacre (a reminder of the nickelodion days, but withal, picturesque and exciting) stamps out the courageous caravan, but his little boy lives—lives to find romantic expression later as mentioned above. In the latter part of the picture you see the Tom Mix of daring horsemanship. Otherwise he assumes the garb of a romantic actor and gives a good account of himself. A picturesque tale and one that interests from inception to conclusion. It is particularly well fortified with the romantic note and punctuated with enlivened action, pathos and homely humor. Eva Novak appears opposite Mix and gives a charming portrayal. Length, 5 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Tim Mix, the popular Fox star, will appear at the ——— theatre for ———days beginning ——— in his newest screen production, "The Feud." This subject offers Mr. Mix a role that is a distinct departure from anything he has heretofore attempted. While he has an opportunity to display his ability in the saddle, the picture gives him a chance to interpret a dramatic character as well. The story is laid in the blue grass region before the Civil War and the star appears as Jere Lynch, whose family is engaged in an ancient feud with the Summers family. The "song of hate" does not prevent Jere from loving pretty Betty Summers, and they make the hut of Nancy, a negro mammy, their secret rendezvous. She predicts that the union will not take place till blood has been shed.

How true her prophecy is fulfilled is realized when Betty's brother and Jere's father give up their lives. The lover had gone to his father's defense and fired the bullet into the body of his young enemy. He escapes and makes his way to California, and here it is that a series of thrilling incidents which include an Indian attack upon a caravan train are presented. Jere, when he failed to hear from Betty, had married Ray Saunders, a girl whom he rescued from a buffalo stampede. And his wife is killed in the massacre. Jere expires later from his wounds. But the little boy is miraculously saved and he grows up as John Smith. He marries the daughter of his father's old sweetheart, Betty Summers, who had become the wife of Cal Brown, and their daughter had come West to stake out a claim. The children of the separated lovers learn of the feud in their lives through the grandmother of the girl. And the hatred is fanned into a flame. The feud ends when John becomes a happy father. The picture is rich in action and atmosphere and it is capably played by the star and a large supporting cast.

CATCH LINES

A thrilling romance of the days befo' de war. That is "The Feud," which presents Tom Mix. It carries thrills and spectacular incidents. Don't miss it.

PROGRAM READER

Memories of the days of crinolines and hoopskirts, of men who wore their hair long and were quick on the trigger—of pioneer days and of romance—are conjured up by "The Feud," the new Tom Mix feature which will be presented at this theatre very shortly. This new production is rich in interest, for its action is laid in the most stirring days of American history. The period shown in "The Feud" lends itself admirably to visualization, and the most is made of that fact. Tom Mix appears quite at home in the 1860 costume which he wears during the episode when he is drawn into the feud as the son of one of the warring families. Later the star is seen as a pioneer in the early days of the West. He fits the role of a frontiersman perfectly, and his expert horsemanship enables him to perform several unique feats.

"THE DAY SHE PAID"
(UNIVERSAL)

Will Entertain Average Audience

"THE Day She Paid" is not a society drama, nor is it spectacular or melodramatic, and it has no mysteries or murders. It is just an everyday straightway drama with familiar angles. The settings are all suitable enough to meet the requirements of the story which calls for nothing elaborate.

Although the cast is small the four principals portray their respective roles very neatly and effectively. And the direction and continuity are up to present day standards, as is also the photography.

She was formerly a manequin in a gown store and marries an up-state merchant who was a widower with two children. Years later her former employer of the gown establishment visits the town and pays marked attention to one of her charming stepdaughters and in order to save the girl she confesses to her husband that the gown man had ruined her in her youth. Story by Fannie Hurst.
Scenario by Hal Hoadley and Clarkson Miller.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Day She Paid," a Universal feature from the Fannie Hurst story, will be shown at the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

Francelia Billington, Barney Sherry and Gloria Hope are the featured players of this modern drama.

Marion Becker is a mannequin in a New York gown establishment and meets a wealthy up-state merchant who is a widower with two charming children. She loves the man and knows that he loves her but is in doubt as to whether she should accept him or not until she has consulted with her employer.

This same employer was a libertine who had once taken advantage of her youth and then refused to marry her. He advised her to marry her suitor and not confess her one youthful indiscretion.

Years later when she is living happily with her husband and his two children this same gown merchant pays them a visit and casts longing eyes at the eldest daughter who was just entering young womanhood. The stepmother was distracted.

At last in order to save the girl she tells her husband what a libertine this gown merchant is and also confesses her youthful error. The husband casts her from the house and she goes to New York where she supports herself on a trade journal.

Through a rapid sequence of events the couple meet again in the metropolis and a happy re-union is the result with the villain properly punished.

PROGRAM READER

Should she confess her one youthful discretion or not?

He wanted to marry her and she loved him and knew that he loved her. But she knew that he was firm for the standard of morals generally accepted.

What he would condone in a man's past he would condemn in the woman's early life.

So she married and kept the past secret. It was when she confessed to this one youthful error later on to save her stepdaughter from falling in this same libertine's hands that lost her her happiness for her husband cast her from him.

And a few months afterward:

Well you must see "The Day She Paid," at this theatre next week to get the whole story.

It is a Universal feature with Francelia Billington, Barney Sherry and Gloria Hope.

SUGGESTIONS

When you have booked this feature you will readily understand that it will stand for no special stunts or freak advertising. But the title is attractive and a display of cuts and photographs with the three names Francelia Billington, Gloria Hope and Barney Sherry, and the heavy whose name does not appear in the early cast submitted, should get results for you. And outside the program reader and story material and the catch lines, and the fact that it is a Universal picture, this should prove sufficient as the picture will not stand too much extra exploitation although it will suitably entertain.

CATCH LINES

What he would condone in a man he would condemn in a woman.

She bared her past life to her husband to save her stepdaughter,—and was banished.

Her employer was a libertine but she foils him by sacrificing her own future happiness.

One charming girl was tired of boys and wanted a "real man." But she picked an "unreal" man.

"THE LONE WOLF'S DAUGHTER"
(J. PARKER REED JR. HODKINSON)

A Stirring Melodrama That Will Register

J. PARKER REED, JR., has taken a stirring story by Louis Joseph Vance and given us a melodramatic screen production with a final kick in it stronger than wood alcohol. In these strenuous days it is very probable that patrons are demanding pictures full of action and that is just what this one is.

The locale is in London, partly in Soho, the French quarter, and then in the Limehouse district, at the Red Moon. Louise Glaum, as "The Lone Wolf's Daughter", gives an excellent performance as does Edwin Stevens and all other members of the cast in their respective roles. The direction and continuity are very good and the picture is suitably mounted.

Those that like material served fast, with a suspense element, and augmented by a romantic trend, will thoroughly enjoy this photoplay.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are:—Metropolitan, big puller and very pleasing; Elite, good puller and generally pleasing; Family, big puller and generally pleasing; Workers, strong puller and exceptionally pleasing.—Length 7 reels.—Released December 14.—TOM HAMLIN.

Story by Louis Joseph Vance.
Supervised by J. Parker Reed, Jr.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Louise Glaum in "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" is the attraction at the ——— for ——— days beginning ———.

Louis Joseph Vance is the author and J. Parker Reed, Jr., is responsible for the screen production released by Hodkinson.

All the action takes place in London, and it is described as a stirring melodrama with many scenes in the Limehouse section. Soho, the French quarter in London, is also the scene for many of the activities.

As Prince Victor, Edwin Stevens is said to have one of the best roles of his screen careeer. During the prologue Louise Glaum is the wife of Prince Victor and afterwards the Lone Wolf's Daughter. An emotional role by this star is said to be well worth seeing and this picture gives her wide scope.

There are said to be more thrills provided in this seven reel feature than there is in the fifteen episode serials.

When Prince Victor's wife left him because of his tyranny and went with Michael Lanyard, "The Lone Wolf," the prologue passes ahead about twenty years into today. And this hows the Prince at the head of London's most feared criminal gang.

And then the Prince gets the Lone Wolf's daughter into his hands and plans a terrible revenge; but he is disturbed by a note that informs him that the Lone Wolf has arrived in London and is after the gang.

Exciting melodramatic events happen fact and furious until the thrilling climax in which justice wins and love is realized.

PROGRAM READER

And she was the Lone Wolf's daughter. Can you imagine Louise Glaum in this emotional role in a Louis Joseph Vance story of adventure and romance?

All this happens in London. And the famous Limehouse district is pictured in this Hodkinson production supervised by J. Parker Reed, Jr. Another of the picturesque London sections is portrayed in Soho, the famous French quarter of the English metropolis.

When the beautiful wife of Prince Victor leaves him because of his terrible temper and jealous rages she accepts refuge with Michael Lanyard, the Lone Wolf. And twenty years afterwards we find the Prince as head of a notorious criminal gang in London.

And Sonia (Louise Glaum), the Lone Wolf's daughter, is in his grasp. It is then that the Lone Wolf arrives in London to find his daughter and also to try to break up this criminal combination. And there are thrills galore. And romance. And fights and rescues until justice conquers and love finds a way.

"The Lone Wolf's Daughter" comes to this theatre next week. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

Four names will be found in this combination that should pull, as you will undoubtedly soon discover after booking this production. Louis Joseph Vance, the author; Louise Glaum, the star; J. Parker Reed, Jr., the supervising director; Hodkinson, the brand name. And for lobby display you can frame up a picturesque idea of the French quarter on one side and an artistic portrayal of the Limehouse section on the other side if you have a good artist and want to go to the expense of providing a striking lobby. Call one "Soho," the famous French quarter of London, and the other "The Red Moon," from the famous Limehouse section in London. And a large cut-out of Louise Glaum in the centre and carded "Louise Glaum as the Lone Wolf's Daughter, in the great story by Louis Joseph Vance."

CATCH LINES

Prince Victor was the commanding head of a powerful gang of criminals that stopped at nothing.

The Lone Wolf was mysteriously undermining the greatest organization of crooks in London.

When this girl discovered that she was the Lone Wolf's daughter she was thrown into the midst of thrilling adventures and then romance.

"THE PRINCE AND BETTY"
(JESSE HAMPTON-PATHE)

Desmond Appears in Comic Opera Plot

ONE of those comic opera plots as it concerns a revolution in a mythical principality is the piece de resistance of "The Prince and Betty," William Desmond's newest photoplay. It is a frothy affair which is enjoyed best on the printed page and in all likelihood it is pleasant reading considering that P. G. Wodehouse wrote it.

These comic opera countries and their revolutions, their breezy Americans who invariably inherit the throne by marrying the princesses, have been done since time immemorial. Douglas Fairbanks is about the only sponsor left of the ancient formula. And everybody accepts him in the silly things because he is "Doug." "The Prince and Betty" might have been breezy had it been conceived upon the Fairbanksian model. It falters because the humorous note is not kept spontaneous.

Yet as every romantic actor has had a try at the formula except William Desmond, probably he thought it about time that he entered the large and growing circle. It may be said of him that he makes the character more likeable than any of his contemporaries we can think of now. No heroics for Desmond. He doesn't take himself seriously in such a role. Therefore he maintains his balance. He is intelligent enough to realize the shortcomings of the part and abide by them. The piece has moments when it compels interest in the few flashes of humor, and these with the star's performance, and the work of his assistants will doubtlessly carry it by to those patrons who are not exacting in their screen entertainment. The picture is handsomely staged and contains a rich suggestion of atmosphere. Length, 5 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Desmond, the popular star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest picture production entitled "The Prince and Betty." This is based upon a story written by P. G. Wodehouse, a well known fictionist and playwright, and awards the star the thoroughly congenial role of John Maude, an American, who inherits the throne of Mervo, a small principality in Eastern Europe. The young man has been told by his uncle that his services are no longer desired and with a month's salary in his pocket he decides to buy the Biltmore clerk's cigar stand. John had overstayed his vacation, the reason being that he had fallen in love with Betty Keith, a rich society girl.

But he no sooner takes possession of his "counter" than an emissary of the President of Mervo informs that he is the rightful heir, and that he should hasten to the country at once. When he arrives he learns that Benjamin Scobell, an enterprising American, is in charge of things. The latter sees a chance to make a lot of money, so he stages a revolution, puts John on the throne, and makes a rival Monte Carlo out of Mervo. The scheme looks satisfactory to the Prince until Bety arrives. She is Scobell's step-daughter. Surprised to find John a party to the gambling venture she informs him that he is in disgrace as far as she is concerned. So he brings on a counter revolution and puts his house in order.. Thus he is able to convince Betty that he has her interest at heart. The picture is replete with romance, adventure, thrills and humor and it is excellently staged by Robert Thornby, the director.

CATCH LINES

Would you leave a cigar counter to become a Prince? See William Desmond in a humorous photoplay, "The Prince and Betty."

He was a pauper—but a pauper can become a prince. See William Desmond in the joyful, rollicking comedy—a comedy rich in romance and adventure. See "The Prince and Betty."

He started a revolution and found himself the center of an angry mob. Then he found the only girl. What happened? See William Desmond in "The Prince and Betty."

PROGRAM READER

P. G. Wodehouse, the humorist, author and playwright, is responsible for "The Prince and Betty," William Desmond's newest picture which comes to this theatre in the near future. He had just retprned from his vacation to find that his services were no longer desired. Why? Because he had overstayed his allotted time, the reason being that he had fallen in love with a charming debutante. But he didn't care whether he had lost his job or not. He would buy a cigar stand. Then just as he had taken possession of the ccunter he found that he was wanted in Mervo to take possesion of the throne. And when he got there he found that he was only a puppet—that he was only needed to start a revolution so that an enerprising American could make a lot of money. And who do you suppose turned up? Why the girl. How he took care of himself and his throne, how he turned the tables, how he kept the girl's interest are events which compose a delightful photoplay—one filled with adventure and humor and romance. See it.

"L'APACHE"
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Dalton Finds Expression in Dual Role

THE dual role has its innings in this newest Ince-Paramount-Artcraft production, "L'Apache," and with Dorothy Dalton differentiating the two characters, the picture may be called an interesting program offering. We say "program" because any story constructed around a dual identity is not conceived with any inspiration. It is as if nothing else occurred to Mr. Ince worth telling at the time and he was forced to resort to the double role pattern. At that he has done a capable job as such jobs go. The girls are not twins, nor does an anxious father embrace a child other than his own and accept her as his off-spring even though some directors are forever attempting to show us that there are people so identically alike that their own relatives cannot tell them apart.

"L'Apache" is fairly plausible of plot even though a trifle far-fetched. The American mistress of a French boulevardier, realizing that she has lost her soul, desires to end it all, but to save her grandfather from being disillusioned she obtains the promise of a little Apache, who resembles her, to assume her identity. The latter jumps at the chance since it takes her away from her criminal husband.

In the meantime the spectator will be interested in a touch of the Paris underworld and its atmosphere, action and conflict. Miss Dalton is enlarging her expression constantly. She interprets French character with genuine adaptability. And the same may be said of Macey Harlan as her Apache husband. He looks the part and acts it.—Length 5 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Dorothy Dalton, the Ince-Paramount-Artcraft star, will appear at the ——— theatre beginning ——— in her newest photoplay entitled "L'Apache." As the title indicates, this is a story of the Paris underworld—of the strange figures who people it. Miss Dalton has a dual role here, and her ability to differentiate the characters of the American woman who is carrying on a liason with a wealthy Frenchman, and a grisette of the Paris streets, who is forced into matrimony with an Apache, stamps her as a dramatic actress of the first order. It is not a misstatement when we declare the role to be the most difficult that the star ever interpreted. And she rises to the occaion with a remarkable display of talent.

Natalie Bourget and Helen Armstrong resemble one another so closely that the latter takes advantage of it when she would save her grandfather from disillusionment. The old gentleman has sent Helen to Paris to complete her musical education, but like a moth who soars too closely to the flame, she approached too near the danger mark and her soul is scorched. Carnival night is being celebrated, and accompanying Harrison Forbes, a millionaire, to whom she sacrificed her good name, to a cabaret, she suddenly realizes that she is only a plaything. He has become infatuated with Natalie and takes her home. Helen quarrels with Forbes and commits suicide. But before she determines to end her life she exacts a promise from Natalie to masquerade as herself for her grandfather's sake. And the little girl, to be free from her criminal husband, gladly consents. In the meantime Forbes has been murdered by the Apache and Helen is suspected of the crime, and fearing the law has drowned herself. Eventually Natalie finds happiness. Miss Dalton is cleverly supported by Robert Elliot and Macey Harlan.

CATCH LINES

A picture of the Paris underworld—a fascinating picture of love and adventure and disillusionment—and happiness too. See Dorothy Dalton in her greatest role. See "L'Apache."

She was the wife of an Apache but she found a way to leave him and his criminal roof. This is told in a series of dramatic events. See "L'Apache."

They were alike as two peas—this little girl of the Paris streets and the American woman. This remarkable resemblance brought happiness to one and oblivion to the other. See "L'Apache."

PROGRAM READER

Dorothy Dalyton, the Ince emotional star—Dorothy Dalton, the talk of New York in the play "Aphrodite"—Dorothy Dalton, the actress supreme in delinating passionate women of the mad, bad days of California, will appear at this theatre very soon in her greatest screen role in "L'Apache." This is a tale of the Paris underworld and the Paris boulevards. A tale of an Apache's wife and a woman who has sacrificed her good name. The latter has come to Paris to make the world bow at her feet—and the world scoffed. Disillusioned, she sought forgetfulness in death. The former would like to escape her evil associates, but she is guided by fear. Then the strange hand of Fate beckoned and the clouds parted and sunshine stole through. We have given just an inkling of the plot, but you can gleam from it that it is an exceptionally fascinating one. It is a picture with a theme based upon hope and love and happiness—these can only be found when one is pure in heart and mind.

"TEETH OF THE TIGER"

(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

A High Class Mystery Story with Thrills

IF your patrons like a good gripping mystery story with romance and thrills they will be agreeably entertained by this high class photoplay. And the story does not seem a bit far-fetched in these adventurous days. The continuity and direction are splendid and the piece is well mounted.

Every member of the cast is an experienced screen performer and all are suitable types for their respective roles. Fast action combined with suspense is displayed all through the picture to the pleasing finale. No morbid situations are injected.

The notorious French crook Arsene Lupin is living as Paul Sernine in an American City and is the hero in defeating the attempts of an American criminal to make away with a wealthy man in order to deprive the estate from a young girl. During the rush of events Paul is often suspicioned by the police but on these occasions he either eludes the officers or allays them until he finally succeeds in unmasking the real criminal and not only earns the girl's gratitude but also her love.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Maurice Le Blanc's famous Arsene Lupin story set in America is entitled "The Teeth of the Tiger," and is the Paramount-Artcraft picture scheduled for a ——— days' showing at the ——— theatre, beginning ———.

Arsene Lupin, the famous French master crook, supposed by the world to be dead, is in reality living as a respectable gentleman in an American city. His old millionaire friend summons him to help defend his life, as the wealthy old gentleman fears death at the hands of plotters.

The old mansion is a veritable mystery house and inhabited by the old man and his ward in addition to a retinue of servants. The detective sent by the authorities to help guard the millionaire is recognized by Arsene Lupin as one of his old pals, a notorious French crook of the early days.

While they are guarding the locked room containing the old man he is mysteriously murdered. Many times during the exciting events which followed the police suspected Arsene Lupin of the crime, but he manages to either allay their suspicions or escapes from them many times.

The pretty young ward of the millionaire was also very suspicious of the hero until she found herself in love with him and he with her. This is described as one of the most enthralling pictures of the year.

And the cast contains the following well known names: David Powell, Marguerite Courtot, Templar Saxe, Myrtle Stedman and Joseph Herbert. Chet Withey directed this remarkable production for Famous Players-Lasky.

PROGRAM READER

Arsene Lupin and a noted detective guarded the locked room. But the old millionaire met his fate in a modern American mansion.

The American police were puzzled. This afforded the force one of its biggest mysteries.

Many times they accused Arsene Lupin of the crime, but he allayed their suspicions, until finally in desperation they determined to arrest him, and from then on he was forced to make one escape after another.

The former French crook was now living as a respectable man in America and was in love with the ward of the old millionaire. And even she was suspicious of him and for a while he thought that she was a party to the crime.

There are plenty of thrills to entertain and mystery and romance have large parts in the Paramount-Artcraft picture coming to this theatre next week.

"The Teeth of the Tiger" is the title and David Powell, supported by an all star cast, appears as Arsene Lupin.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you should be sure to emphasize that it is Arsene Lupin come to life "in America." Give them at least a half dozen names of the members of the cast to disabuse their minds of the idea that this may be a French picture. Mention David Powell, Marguerite Courtot, Templar Saxe, Myrtle Stedman and Joseph Herbert. Emphasize that it is a Paramount-Artcraft picture directed by Chet Withey and based upon the story by Maurice Le Blanc. Herald it is mystery, adventures and romance in an American metropolis, and of a distinctly high class type.

CATCH LINES

Who killed Henry Forbes, the American millionaire?

Locked in a room and protected by alert guards, he met a mysterious death.

———

Romance appeared and thrived under thrilling circumstances.

"THE TONG MAN"

(HAWORTH-ROBERTSON-COLE)

Hayakawa in Different Role That Scores

SESSUE HAYAKAWA has a perfect glove-fitting role as Luk Chan in "The Tong Man." There are no society surroundings nor aristocratic environments in this picture. There is a different atmosphere entirely and no diplomatic intrigue. Above all it does not portray the usual finale of so many of his pictures that showed that "East is East and West is West and the twain shall never meet." Romance is not blasted at the finish of this one, which possesses the happy ending.

"The Tong Man" scenes are set in San Francisco's Chinatown and it presents the Japanese star as a member of a tong that chooses him to slay the father of his Chinese sweetheart. And many a good serial has missed fire on the real thrills injected in this feature. The direction is very good and the mountings are well nigh perfect. Helen Eddy portrays the Chinese sweetheart and the fadeout shows the couple on a steamship bound for China after defeating their enemies.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are:—Metropolitan, good puller and very pleasing; Elite, good puller and fairly pleasing; Family, good puller and generally pleasing; Workers, Big puller and very pleasing.—Length 5 reels.—Released December 14.—TOM HAMLIN.

THE CAST

Luk Chan.....Sessue Hayakawa
Sen Chee.....Helen Eddy
Ming Tai.....Marc Robins
Louie Toy.....Toyo Fujita
Lucero.....Jack Abbe

From the Story by Clyde C. Westover entitled "The Dragon's Daughter."
Produced by Haworth for Robertson-Cole.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Sessue Hayakawa in "The Tong Man" is the attraction scheduled for a ——— days' run at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

This is described as a role that fits the noted Japanese actor like a glove and is entirely different from the roles he has interpreted in so many of his former pictures.

"The Tong Man" is a melodramatic screen production set almost entirely in San Francisco's famous Chinatown. The star appears as Luk Chan, and is very much in love with a sweet little Chinese maiden.

As a member of a great tong and the cleverest hatchet man in the organization he is selected to slay the father of the girl he loves. And the chief of the gang or tong is in love with the same girl and is bound to have her by fair means or foul.

This is the tremendous plot that affords the excuse for all the fast action and fights and chases that follow one another in rapid succesion. And Luk Chan proves himself a hero by choosing love and daring death by defying the chief of his great tong.

This picture does not have the sad ending most Hayakawa pictures have, with romance blasted at the end because of race. In the final fadeout after all the thrills we see the Mongolian couple on board a huge steamship bound for China and happiness.

PROGRAM READER

He was the greatest hatchet man of his much feared tong and dearly loved a little Chinese maiden, the daughter of a wealthy merchant.

San Francisco's Chinatown was his field of operations, but the terrible blow came when his tong selected him to slay the father of his loved one.

He had to show whether he was to keep faith with his tong and watch his sweetheart suffer the loss of her father or dare the tong to do its worst.

Sessue Hayakawa has a different role in "The Tong Man" than he has had in his former pictures. And this plot forms the nucleus for one of the most exciting and absorbing stories ever screened.

It was taken from the book "The Dragon's Daughter," by Clyde C. Westover, and this Haworth-Robertson-Cole picture, "The Tong Man," will be shown at this theatre next week.

You wil actually find more action and thrills in this five reel feature than is embraced in a fifteen episode serial.

SUGGESTIONS

There is one thing to harp on after you have booked this picture, and that is that Sessue Hayakawa, the star, is in a very different role than he has portrayed in former pictures. Not the society gentleman embroiled in international intrigue and in love with a white woman wham he has to give up because of the difference in race, but a clever hatchet man of an active tong in San Francisco's Chinatown. Tell them that this is an out-and-out melodrama of thrills, with the hero in love with the little Chinese maiden whose father the tong ordered him to slay. And mention that this one has he happy ending, but not until after an array of exciting events that is wonderful to behold.

CATCH LINES

Where the cleverest hatchet man of the tong is ordered to slay the father of his sweetheart.

———

In which one man proves himself a hero by defying his organization at the call of love.

———

One man pits his wits and cleverness against an organization of whose members he formerly called brothers.

———

And one celestial couple finally sails away in search of happiness after escaping the grief and turmoil.

Realart Star Pleases Broadway

Constance Binney Seen in Film Plays at Rialto and Capitol Theatres; Journals Accord Praise

CONSTANCE BINNEY, the Realart star, had the distinction of appearing on the screen at two of the largest Broadway, New York, picture palaces during the week of December 7. Miss Binney began an engagement in her first Realart starring vehicle, "Erstwhile Susan," at the Rialto and at the same time was seen at the massive Capitol theatre in a film playlet, "Tom's Little Star."

Reports from the Rialto theatre on the opening night declared that this star of stage and screen was proving as great a drawing power as she did in her stage success, "39 East," when it appeared in New York City previous to its present tour. In the second photoplay, which is starring Miss Binney on Broadway this week, "Tom's Little Star," at the Capitol, the Realart actress takes the leading role in such notable company as Henry Miller, Blanche Bates, Daniel Frohman, Otis Skinner, Henry Hull, Flo Ziegfeld and others. This photoplay was made several months ago for the benefit of the Stage Women's War Relief.

The sentiment of newspaper reviewers in regard to Miss Binney's work at the Rialto in "Erstwhile Susan," which has been re-informed by similar splendid appreciation from out-of-town exhibitors who are showing her first release, are gratifying to the Realart officials who have heralded this charming actress as a motion picture star of unlimited possibilities.

The New York Sun had the finest praise for Miss Binney. The reviewer said: "At the Rialto, Constance Binney keeps one's eyes on the job with her cherubic presence in 'Erstwhile Susan.' This Realart production has been converted to the screen from the stage piece in which Mrs. Fiske starred. Miss Binney makes an alluring picture of youthful grace even as a household drudge in the Pennsylvania Dutch setting. She displays when called upon for it, that sudden burst of temperamental fire that is one of the delightful surprises in this charming young star, and lifts her well above the class of the Dresden China school of acting."

Similar sentiments were expressed by the New Yorw Tribune, which spoke of Miss Binney as follows: "Miss Binney is delightful in the part of Barnabetta Dreary, the daughter of an irascible, old-fashioned Dutchman, and looks charming in the gingham dress she wears on the farm as in the more stylish clothes she wears after she has been graduated from college."

Other newspaper reviews echoed the same sentiments.

Sells "Lost City" for The South

First National of Atlanta Takes Warner Serial for Six States—Big Advertising Campaign

ATTESTING the popularity of Selig's million-dollar animal serial, "The Lost City," in which Juanita Hansen is starred, assisted by George Chesbrough, announcement comes from the Warner Brothers' office, where the American and Canadian Rights are being disposed of, that the First National Exhibitors Circuit of Atlanta, Ga., has purchased the distribution rights for Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Virginia, and North and South Carolina.

Wild and mountainous scenery has no fears for Bruce Scenic camermen as the above shows. Bruce Scenics are released through Educational.

Harry Warner, in commenting on the rapidity in which the territories are being sold, states that many inquiries are coming in from all over the country, and the indications are that the entire American and Canadian Rights will be sold within the next thirty days. The demand for territorial rights are beyond his fondest expectations, it is claimed.

"The Lost City" is declared a distinct surprise in serial production, going further in its thrills and sensations than anything of its kind yet produced for the screen. Laid in the African jungles and cast desert stretches, the story calls for all the wild denizens of this adventuresome quarter of the world; and thus we find elephants, lions, tigers, leopards, camels, gorillas, and many other wild animals of the jungles, all playing their part in this gigantic story, adding their own individual thrills to the strenuous tale.

With such a tremendous advertising campaign as has been planned, and the attractive posters and advertising accessories, the exhibitor should have the opportunity, not only to drawing the regular serial fans, but the children and their parents at special matinees.

In regard to the picture, an announcement said this week: "One thing is certain, 'The Lost City' will grip and hold any audience, because it possesses that element of curiosity, as well as sensation that make one intensely anxious to know the outcome of each episode and because of this and the big manner in which it has been produced, there can be no doubt whatever but that it will draw.

In and Out the West Coast Studios

past two weeks on his forthcoming relea which will be handled by Sol Lesser, connection with personal appearance to by the star, which was recently announc by Mr. Lesser. Mr. Beban has select "One Man in a Million," as the title, a his supporting cast, besides his little fou year-old son, George, formerly known Bob White, includes Helen Eddy as leadi woman with Lloyd Whitlock playing t opposite lead. Dorothy Cummins, Georg B. Williams, and Jennie Lee are others i the cast. Production is being conducted a the Katherine MacDonald studios. Ros Fisher, who has been with George Loan Tucker for the past several months, ha been engaged by Mr. Beban as cameraman and DeWitt Hager is serving in the capacit of business manager.

Mack Sennett made the announcemen that he had completed work of filming a new multiple reel comedy of four parts and a prologue, and that the subject will be ready for preview within the next two weeks. Inasmuch as the usual Sennett policy of selecting a title last is being adhered to in this instance, it is probable the name of Mr. Sennett's most recent subject will not be known until wholly completed. Mr. Sennett is responsible for the statement that he is introducing in this some novel features that are new in every respect.

Marshall Neilan and Company have returned from a trip to the northwest where they went in search of scenes for the James Oliver Curwood story, "The River's End," but because of unsatisfactory climatic conditions their trip was made short and a number of scenes were filmed in the vicinity of Dunsmir, Cal. The remainder will be taken in Southern California.

Besides, Producer Neilan, those in the party were Marjorie Daw, Jane Novak, Lewis Stone, Charles Smith and Mr. Neilan's assistant.

President Samuel S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Company, has arrived in Los Angeles during the past few days on his way to Santa Barbara where he will spend several weeks with General Manager R. R. Nehls. Mr. Hutchinson intimated that he would shortly have an announcement to make respecting the future activities of the American Company.

Philadelphia Houses Score with "The Brat"

As a sequel to the day and date record established by Nazimova in "The Brat," when that production showed recently at six of Philadelphia's leading motion picture theatres at the same time, the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation in the Longacre Building received unsolicited telegrams from the managers of each of the theatres in which "The Brat" showed, testifying to the production's extraordinary merit as a feature attraction and in drawing capacity crowds.

The six Philadelphia theatres in which "The Brat" established its record are among the finest in the Quaker City.

First Check on American's Profit Sharing Plan

The first check to be issued in the American Film Company's recently adopted profit-sharing sales plan goes to 'Frisco—or, to be more precise, to S. M. Bowles, "Flying A" sales representative in that field.

The new bonus policy was announced to the Company's sales representatives by General Sales Manager C. A. Stimson, at the sales conference held in Chicago last August. It went into effect with "Six Feet Four," the first "Flying A Special."

The working plan of the innovation is as follows: When a new feature is completed, the production cost is figured and each branch is charged with its pro-rata share of that cost. As soon as the collections on that particular feature in any one field reach the stipulated amount, the bonus begins to operate; and every booking secured thereafter means a percentage of the rental price for the salesman.

Olive Thomas and Cast Go South

Another southern exodus is on among the stars of the Selznick Studios. Olive Thomas, accompanied by director Alan Crosland and members of the cast, left for a southern tour which includes Savannah, New Orleans, and points in Florida in quest of exterior locations for the opening scenes of Miss Thomas' sixth Selznick picture, announced under the working title of "Glorious Youth."

Triangle Reissues Popular Plays

"Betty of Greystone," with Dorothy Gish, and "The Clodhopper," with Charles Ray, Are Scheduled

THE demand of exhibitors for clean, wholesome stories to replace murder, mystery, eternal triangle, he-vamp and she-vamp themes in productions released during the holiday season is reflected in the Triangle announcement that "Betty of Greystone," featuring Dorothy Gish and "The Clodhopper," with Charles Ray will be released. Triangle describes these releases as "holiday pictures for holiday time."

"Betty of Greystone" will be available on December 14, and "The Clodhopper" is released on January 4.

"Betty of Greystone" may be classed as a perfect holiday picture. Miss Dorothy Gish is always associated with plays of a clean order and her power to spread happiness to all is well known. Her name will serve to call in the shopper no matter how urgent is the call to "shop."

Supporting Miss Gish is Owen Moore, the irresistible lover whose following is large among that sex whose members form seventy-five per cent of the average moving picture audience. The cast also includes George Fawcett, Kate Bruce and Norman Selby (Kid McCoy).

Two names which will serve as extra "pullers" are those of the directors. Allan Dwan handled the megaphone for Dorothy Gish in this production which was supervised by D. W. Griffith.

The story deals with both country and city life. It contains no villains in the real sense of the word. Every scene is tense and full of action. The entire production radiates happiness and is the ideal picture to show in any first-class house during the holidays.

"The Clodhopper," an original story by Monte M. Katterjohn, author of "The Flame of the Yukon" is a Thos. H. Ince production. The photoplay is ranked as one of the best pieces of artistry ever conceived by that inimitable actor.

The story shows Charles Ray in the part he likes to play best, the role of a country boy. But how that boy acts when placed upon the stage among a bevy of Broadway chorus girls is said to be the best piece of "business" of its kind seen on the silver screen in a long time. Ray can create sympathy in the audience as few actors can and it is on this account that "The Clodhopper" is specially valuable at this time.

La Rocque Joins Realart

Director Kenneth Webb has chosen Rod La Rocque to appear opposite Constance Binney in her next Realart production. Mr. La Rocque left New York to join the company, which was waiting for him in Chicago, where the picture will be made.

Vengeance!
Deep as the Ocean!

IT STARTS THE THRILL ALONG THE SPINE!

In all the history of motion pictures there has never been a picture like "Behind the Door."

In its slashing boldness, its eloquent daring, its gigantic theme—above all, in its terrific punch—"Behind the Door" stands absolutely and unqualifiedly alone!

It is the very heart and soul of a great passion laid bare with consummate art, to stir to the depths the hearts and souls of grown-up men and women.

ON the stage. In the photoplay studio. What do you know of the life there? Rumors? Gossip? Startling stories?

Scenes "inside," intimately portrayed in this vivid Oppenheim romance of love, conflict and intrigue among those who live—and those who prey on the stage and studio.

Only the limitations of the English Language kept the Critics from saying more than this MOVING PICTURE WORLD: J. Parker Read, Jr. has one of the most elaborately produced and powerfully enacted melodramas ever screened in this newest Louise Glaum special. Seven rich, wonderful reels of magnificent settings; diversity of locations. An especial triumph for Louise Glaum and her fine, associated player, Edwin Stevens.

TOM HAMLIN'S LETTER: All screen fans and the gallery gods now in the downstairs seats will go wild over this big J. Parker Read. Jr. seven-reel special. This hardened old reviewer of motion pictures was highly entertained and closely held by it. Louise Glaum scores big.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: J. Parker Read, Jr. has taken this stirring Louise Joseph Vance story and given it production with a final kick in it stronger than wood alcohol. Here is our estimate of its theatre values: Large metropolitan first runs, big puller and very pleasing. Class houses, good puller and pleasing. Family houses, big puller. Neighborhood houses, strong puller and exceptionally pleasing. Material served fast with suspense, augmented by a romantic trend. Everybody will thoroughly enjoy it.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW: Clothed with beautiful and lavish sets, this production affords exhibitors with a melodrama containing real thrills, a consistent and interesting romance and entertaining possibilities far beyond denial. Having bid farewell to vampire roles forever, Louise Glaum now achieves her greatest success and shows her immense dramatic versatility.

MORNING TELEGRAPH: Typically moving-picturesquely entertaining is this lavish and made-without-thought-of-expense production of "The Lone Wolf's Daughter;" Louis Joseph Vance at his most thrilling best. The players supporting Miss Glaum mean a heavy salary list for the producer, J. Parker Read, Jr.

NEW YORK REVIEW: Rival producers may dispute the claim that "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" is the biggest melodrama ever screened, but there are not many picture patrons who can say they ever saw a better or bigger one. And the patrons are the final jury. This production cannot be too highly praised. Miss Glaum never before appeared to such great advantage and Edwin Stevens is wonderful.

THE LORD LOVES THE IRISH

By Monte M. Katterjohn

Directed by Ernest C. Warde

Miles Machree has the luck of the Irish.

In love. In fighting. In politics. In getting to the top.

He smashes rough and tumble through barriers. He wins where others fail.

With the Irish rogue-light in his eyes, the brogue on his tongue he "helps run America" and wins the girl he set his heart on in the beginning back on an Old Country bog.

Certainly she never has been as charming and adorable, never has had the great wealth of beautiful gowns, never has been cast in a role as sympathetic as in this powerful stage success by AMELIE RIVES TROUBETZKOY.

BOX-OFFICE MYSTERY!

YES, there are two kinds: the kind that is just mystic and the mystery that gets the money! "THE MYSTERY OF THE YELLOW ROOM," AN EMILE CHAUTARD PRODUCTION, is built for the box-office. It has the twists that make 'em talk and make 'em come back.

All the world loves a good mystery yarn and all the town will pay to see this CHAUTARD masterpiece, which has a love tangle such as you seldom view on the screen.

Beautiful Ethel Grey Terry is the woman in the case, and George Cowl, Edmund Elton and Lorin Raker, the men. One of them may be an audacious criminal; but it's this very question that keeps whole audiences on edge, racking their brains for the answer, until the last fifty feet of feature shoot upon your screen.

"The Sins of the Mothers"

Directed by RALPH INCE

A tensely dramatic and compelling story of a young girl cursed by heredity with a passion for gambling. She makes a vain struggle against it until shame, exposure and tragedy breaks the spell. A Vitagraph production with a wide appeal and top-notch interest.

Edited by Mr. and Mrs. GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER

EARLE WILLIAMS

More debonair, artistic and admirable than he has ever been before is this splendid, steady star in his latest photoplay vehicle. It is once again that rare achievement that spells by its perfect combination the ultimate desire and objective—pleasure and profit.

The story is an alluring and romantic one that has for its background all the blended charm and beauty of the Occident and the Orient. Its elements are the tried and true ones—love and adventure, tinctured with startling suprises and suspense and capped by a corking climax that will send, all those who see it, away with a new standard of photoplay pleasure.

By giving it an unusually rich and painstaking production, with lavish and rich interiors and beautiful and colorful exteriors, Vitagraph has striven to add laurels to an already enviable reputation earned and acquired. If that greatest and most important of your problems—the finding of a pleasing, satisfying photoplay—still remains unsolved, you need go no further at this moment for here you have it in——

MYSTERY THRILLS ROMANCE

A FEATURE PRODUCTION

SENSATION

George T. Pardy in the Exhibitor's Trade Review—December 13, 1919.

"A WOMAN IN GREY" proceeds along saner lines than the majority of serials, presents a clearly defined plot which isn't lost sight of during its rapid whirl of events of baffling mystery, hair-breadth escapes, lively scraps, and melodramatic action. Love, romance and adventure mingle in alluring fashion and the element of breathless suspense dominates in each episode.

Marion Russell in the Billboard—December 6, 1919.

The one thing which highly recommends this serial to serious consideration is the construction of the story. Built on a solid beginning of baffling mystery it accelerates with each scene, and there is no abatement in the exciting sequences which pile thrill upon thrill. Women especially will follow this serial with eager anticipation.

E. F. Supple in the Motion Picture News—December 20, 1919.

Swift action, a well knit story, strange events cleverly planned to reinforce the central mystery and "chance taking" stunts add greatly to the entertainment value of this production.

Margaret I. Macdonald in the Moving Picture World—December 20, 1919.

One of the charms in this serial is the clever atmosphere of mystery and splendid acting. Its accompanying thrills and the fascinating uncertainty as to what follow the close of each episode.

A story of human hearts so true to life that the dramatic intensity necessary for a moving drama is scarcely missed. John Cumberland offers a characterization which places him in the number one star class.

THE CRITICAL X-RAY

This picture belongs to the very [illegible] class and is so far superior to the general output that the public may not [illegible] it from a commercial standpoint. It is superb from a technical [illegible] it is human without being [illegible] and it is entertaining without resorting to theatrical [illegible]

It is only rare exceptions in which a wedding has been accepted by the movie fans—they look for the story [illegible] and he happy ever after" conclusion—and that is why they will, in a sense, be disappointed in this picture. Logically quitting the room for all from the married years of Jimmy's sacrifice—for age would creep on—and all his penny-pinched wealth would never bring back his youth. And the he [illegible] to be sporty and a regular wrestler with two girls for a devoted gay old boy, it is too late to find happiness.

No finer character studies have ever been shown upon the screen than the three plain featured sisters with their [illegible] gowns, fashion sheets and dinner orders. The genuine fashion sheets and dinner orders. The genuine atmosphere of the narrow home life was also scrupulously observed from the horse hair [illegible] ture with rides on the [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] dark wall paper and general lack of effectiveness. John Morrell Says:

"The Gay Old Dog" Puts Hobart Henley in Griffith-Tucker Class of Directors

A delightful picture was ushered in this week—a picture which did not have that abused word "super" attached to it, but which is entitled to such recognition in its strongest meaning. We are speaking of Hobart Henley's production of The Gay Old Dog an adaptation of Edna Ferber's story of the same name. It is one of the most human achievements that ever reached the screen, and it can safely be put down as a celluloid epic. Those who scoff at the silversheet, those who contend that life cannot be visualized through the medium of the camera, should see this offering. They will change their opinion. If such pictures were shown every day there would be no controversy over the film industry as an artistic enterprise. No trumpets announced its coming. It appeared without the least bit of bombast. Therefore its welcome should be all the more appreciated by a long suffering public.

Hobart Henley has given evidence here that he is a master director. His name can be enrolled along with Griffith and Tucker. He has been human always, but this virtue has never shown to such distinction heretofore, probably because many of his subjects did not contain food for thought. It was so easy to spoil this very human story. Some directors supposedly big ones, too, would have thought its subject matter too frail and recording to orthodox methods would have included the elements of action and suspense.

These dramatic fundamentals are [illegible] here and yet it entertains. Why? Because it is life. It conquers man by realism that it's joys of life for its humanness. Its sympathy, [illegible] its pathos and humor. In fact [illegible] passed thru it, so the attempts to [illegible] find a related zest. And it is painful [illegible] nothing is missing to make this picture a greater achievement. And Mr Henley has honored the author in his faithful conception. When a tear was needed he supplied it and one always lurked behind a smile. That is life too. Simplicity and humanity are its dominant notes, and they are given wonderful expression.

The theme is based upon a promise to a dying relative—a promise which should be broken as lightly as it is seriously made. You look upon a man who allows himself to grow old, who forfeits every right to happiness because of his dying mother's self-imposed that he refrain from marrying until his sisters are provided for. Romance comes to him but he is forced to drive it away. And he is an admirable as his sisters are selfish. They not being prepossessing he is compelled to look after them until they are married. By the time this event happens he has long passed the milestones of youth.

A lonely old man, a pathetic old [illegible] realizes that it's joys of life have passed him by, so he attempts to [illegible] find a belated zest. And it is painful [illegible]

A day comes when he sees his old sweetheart's boy marching away to [illegible] boy who might have been his son. And his poignant sorrow is acute. Wealthy he is but he cannot buy happiness. You look at him sitting in a rose colored room which has grown suddenly drab. And the years drag by monotonously. The world is full of such men—men who go out uncomplaining—men who accept the inevitable with heroic fortitude. How acute must have been his suffering when he realized that when life did have something to offer he had grown too old to enjoy it. The thought struck home that the dead have no right over the desires of the living. He had everything but his sisters were too selfish to appreciate him. There is no touching to a happy ending here. It would have killed the truthfulness. Sid Mr Henley has revealed a powerful thought. That's it—a picture with a thought. He has been faithful to the script—the script of Mrs. Sidney Drew which does not vary one bit from the original. His close application to detail is emphasized in more than one place. The costumes of a bygone day, the decorations—these are representative of that time. As far as the story is concerned he has embellished it with shafts of humor which somewhat alleviate the poignant characterization. Yet the thought remains. It is as fine a picture as anything that has reached the screen this year with the exception of "The Miser's Man." It is real as human as the Tucker achievement although it lacks the spiritual quality of that masterpiece. John Cumberland makes the unfortunate man the noble soul a perfect study. You can not afford to miss this picture. It is art.

"THE GAY OLD DOG"

(HENLEY-PATHE)

One of the Most Human Pictures Ever Shown

HOBART Henley may now enter the circle of master [illegible] His work with Mrs. Sidney Drew's adaptation of Edna Ferber's very human story, "The Gay Old Dog," entitles him to such recognition. Here is an achievement which would have been spoiled had Mr. Henley incorporated the usual dramatic elements. But action and suspense are not needed here because it's a human story and the director has kept faithfully to the script. A sympathetic touch, humanness, humanities which are conceived through remarkably realistic characterization and a close application to detail.

Wonderfully simple and human is this story. Indeed its simplicity and humanity make several of the finer contributions to the screen. Founded upon the idea that a promise to a dying relative is broken as lightly as it is seriously made it presents a theme which [illegible] every right to happiness because of his dead mother [illegible] such regard. He grows old and wealthy and [illegible] attempt to [illegible] zest in life as extremely pathetic.

TRADE REVIEW

"The Gay Old Dog." (Pathe.) In all of your billing on this production keep in mind the fact that this is a story that is out of the ordinary run of fictional photodramas. This story deals with characters true to life and as such must receive advertising accordingly. In all advertising first of all mention the fact that this is a picturization of the short story of the same name by Edna Ferber that appeared in the Metropolitan Magazine and which won the distinction of being one of the best twenty short stories printed that year. Also state that it was directed by Hobart Henley and adapted by Mrs. Sydney Drew. Also mention the fact that John Cumberland, star of many legitimate Broadway successes, has the leading role in this production.

Add dignity to your advertising. Follow out the instructions contained in the press book for this feature by sending out a calling card through your mailing list or else have them distributed by boys from door to door. This is something out of the ordinary and will demand attention. Make use of the dog idea wherever possible. Secure the small slug cut of the dog and the title of the picture from your Pathe exchange and make use of this wherever possible. If you do not adopt the calling card idea and want to send a personal letter arrange it so that you can use this cut.

GENERAL ADVERTISING. Feature this production as an exceptional human life story. State that it is out of the ordinary. Then mention, in all newspaper advertising, the four principal ideas as mentioned above, namely, the director, adaptor, author and star. Boost these for all they are worth. Take as much newspaper space as possible and let your patrons understand that this carries a direct appeal to the better class of motion picture audiences.

In your reading matter adopt the following lines: "His youth spoiled by a deathbed promise—nagged and criticised by his three mature sisters, if was no wonder that when riches came his way that he began trying to enjoy youthful pleasures in his old age. See this pleasing little human interest story at the ——— theatre."

Headlines are "Deathbed Promise Prevents His Marriage and Spoils His Youth," "With the Realization of His Lost Youth Gay Old Dog Asserts His Independence," "An Exceptional Story with a Deep Human Appeal."

PAPER AND OTHER HELPS. One 1-sheet, two 3-sheets, one 6-sheet, and one 24-sheet. Colored lobby photos, cuts, mats, stills, announcement slide, music cue sheets, and press book.

A Film Magazine--A Family Favorite

There is a motion picture that disarms criticism. It is not drama; it is not a comedy; it is not a news film.

No one can say "I didn't like the story in that picture;" nor can anyone say "I didn't like the star."

It has no star nor story; it needs neither the one nor the other.

It is a film magazine—the Pathe Review.

Slow Motion Photography has made a sensation; you yourself have been impressed with the pictures of the galloping horse, moving at a snail's pace, every muscle, every movement clearly revealed; with the record-breaking sprinter who seems to swim across the tape, and other such amazing and instructive things.

Pathe first presented Slow Motion Photography, and you'll find it in the Pathe Review.

Pathecolor is a revelation in beauty. Films in Pathecolor show the scenic loveliness of the earth's wonder spots, in natural colors. Pathecolor pictures are in each number of the Pathe Review.

In Pathe Review are also charming and instructive nature pictures, taken by well known naturalists; pictures revealing the secrets of science; pictures making clear the arts; and others showing ancient, mediaeval and modern dances, interpreted by some of the most famous dancers of the world, staged by Julian Ollendorf.

Give Us Something Cheerful

is the cry of the strike weary and war tired public, not only in America, but across the seas. The war was a world war, and the world is sick of strife, hungry for a bit of sunshine and hearty cheer.

RALPH MORGAN
He brought cheer to thousands in "Turn to the Right"

The PENNY PHILANTHROPIST

has a name that is cheery, and two of the cheeriest stars, both in popularity and money value, the screen has ever known.

PEGGY O'NEILL
As "Peg o' My Heart" she made millions happy.

STATE RIGHT MEN!
FOREIGN RIGHT MEN!

Answer that cry for "Cheerful Pictures" with THE PENNY PHILANTHROPIST.

It is one of the most unusual, optimistic refreshing plays ever screened, with a punch in every reel and with two of the most popular stars of the day.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA

In The TONG MAN

Produced by HAWORTH

William Worthington

PATIENTLY he waits in the shadow of the joss house lantern. Then comes Ah Foy, (fat and placid), as he goes to pay reverence to the honorable bones of his ancestors. A shadow detaches itself from the denser ones of the lantern. There is the sharp whiplike crack of an automatic. Ah Foy falls. As swiftly as the smoke from the gun the denizens of the twisted street fade from sight—the shops are closed and barricaded—for this shot heralds the outbreak of another fearsome Tong War.

This hardly sounds like the gentle characterizations familiar to that exquisite artist Sessue Hayakawa. It is not gentle—it is the red blood—true to type depiction of that great mystery of the Orient—THE TONGMAN.

He is merciless—fighting tooth and nail for his tong until he is chosen to kill the father of the little chrysanthemum maid who has won his heart.

How he refuses to obey the mandate—how he—single-handed fights the whole tong successfully for the little maid he loves furnishes more thrills than are usual in a lengthy serial.

Did you ever grip your chair and hold your breath with fear that the gang is going to "get" the hero.

It takes clever acting to make you feel that way, doesn't it.

You are going to get the thrill of your life when you see Sessue Hayakawa in THE TONGMAN.

No greater characterization has ever been seen on the screen than Hayakawa's work in this Robertson-Cole Superior Picture.

They Say

Motion Picture News: "Louis Burston has caught his stride in standard serial production. The reviewer of The Hawk's Trail was entertained in spite of the fact that he does not care for serials. Can be counted upon to highly entertain any audience anywhere."

Wid's Daily: "From the point of view of the serial fan The Hawk's Trail should be a hit."

Moving Picture World: "The Hawk's Trail is bound to be a winner. Entertaining much dramatic action, well carried out by a notable cast. King Baggot acts convincingly. * * * in his different roles exhibits exceptional ability."

Exhibitors Trade Review: "The Hawk's Trail sizzles with exciting incident and a thrilling climax has a place at the end of each episode. Produced on an extensive scale. Settings in excellent taste. Keeps the gaze steadfastly watching the alarming incidents and leaves one eager to know how the story ends."

The Morning Telegraph: "The Hawk's Trail will offer more entertainment value than the average serial. It is more picturesque in setting and rather more actionful. Should commend itself to the box-office because of the construction of the episodes. The closing of each episode would seem to present a greater appeal to the spectator to see its successor than is usually found in serial subjects."

As a State Rights Feature "The Hawk's Trail" is the biggest offering on the market today. Choice territory awaits shrewd buyers. All communications answered in the order of their receipt.

TO THE MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF AMERICA

ADVERTISING ON THE SCREEN IS A VERY SERIOUS PROBLEM. The exhibitor must, above all things, consider the rights of his patrons. No doubt there are pictures in which the advertising and the entertainment value are inseparably bound up. No other kind of pictures under this plan will be shown on his screen, because no pictures will be offered until they have passed the supervising committee, composed of exhibitors.

All industrial and educational films to be shown hereafter must be controlled and supervised by exhibitors, because they own the screens. Under no circumstances will the exhibitors delegate their rights to supervise their screens to any producing company whatever.

The burglar who is caught with the goods and offers to surrender part of his loot in exchange for a license to burglarize in the future is not an impressive figure morally or from a business standpoint.

Some of the producers who contracted with the big advertisers for the use of our screens without our consent are in the position of the man who has raised money by putting a mortgage on a piece of property to which he has no title.

DON'T SIGN ANY CONTRACTS THAT WILL MORTGAGE YOUR SCREEN TO ANY FILM PRODUCER. GET IN TOUCH WITH ANY OF THE UNDERSIGNED.

Under pressure applied by activities of the Screen Protection Committee, new propositions and offers more or less vague and indefinite, are being made to the exhibitor to induce him to mortgage his screen in the interest of individuals and film producing corporations.

Under the plan worked out by this committee, all money derived from advertising in the pictures shown in each state goes to the state organization for the exhibitors of that state to use as they see fit.

We, the undersigned, have no connection whatever with any alleged, or so-called, "national" exhibitors' organization.

"Educational"—in 1920

SINCE 1915, "Educational" has followed the policy of "short subjects exclusively."

Pioneers then—and pioneers now, we lead in the production of single reel attractions.

The adoption of certain ideals, the establishment of certain standards, and the application of hard work, has brought about the world-wide organization of today.

This outline indicates the extent of "Educational" activities at the beginning of the new year. It illustrates buildting thus far completed—results that have been secured.

The next twelve months will see the growth of half-a-dozen "Educational" departments. The introduction of the new "Rotary" Portable Projection Machine is to be the first—and a fair sample.

We appreciate the splendid co-operation that has made success possible. To all our friends and customers—in every part of the world—we extend "best wishes, and compliments of the season."

Notice To Producers

The Palisade Film Laboratories is booked to complete capacity business until February 1, 1920.

We are open for special release work after that date, and solicit the patronage of high class producers who are desirous of securing film of exceptional quality.

The Palisade Film Laboratories is without question

America's Finest Laboratory

and its work is shown on the screens of America's costliest theatres. The working forces comprise the greatest aggregation of film experts ever assembled under one roof, all under the direction of Paul Ripley, Superintendent.

We are specialists in negative developing, and in combinations of exquisite tones and tints.

During the coming year we shall reserve the right to reject all printing if we find that negatives have been spoiled in handling before they reach our hands. We advise all producers to have their negative developing done at a responsible laboratory, either at the Palisade or some other where experienced men are entrusted with this important work.

A Further Announcement—

To the Members of the MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS OF AMERICA, INC.

FELLOW MEMBERS:

Last week I announced that one producer of Industrial and Educational films,—the Universal Film Manufacturing Co.—had agreed to pay Exhibitors for showing such pictures in the future; and to pay into the treasury of the M.P.E.A., Inc., a percentage of booking charges on such releases.

I thought at that time that I knew the importance of this arrangement to our members, but I was not prepared for the immediate and hearty responses, endorsements, etc., that have reached me through a flood of congratulatory messages, helpful letters of suggestion and promises of co-operation.

I want to thank you all for your hearty support in this great forward, progressive step toward equitable relations between you Exhibitors and the producers of Industrial and Educational pictures.

There is a demand for such pictures and no one can deny that this demand is being met by churches, schools and various organizations, or that—

The exhibition of such pictures outside of our theatres is hurting our business.

The public knows that such prints are to be had, and if the people cannot see them in their theatres they will go where they can see them. We Exhibitors know that the people have the last guess. We book our programs, but their success lies with our patrons.

The world is full of wonders and the public would rather see pictures of them than read about them. The public should be able to see the pictures it wants to see in theatres that represent your investment and mine. Include these subjects on your program and let the public decide how many and how often.

You cannot continue to exist by catering to one class. Consider the number of people who do not go to the motion picture theatres because they do not see there what they want to see. A varied program will attract more patronage.

Now that you are to be paid for showing an Industrial or Educational film of the Universal Industrial Department which bears the seal of our organization, the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., you can safely vary your program more than formerly.

Remember that the M.P.E.A. will derive a revenue from such exhibitions too. And we need the money.

There are many things this organization can do if it has the money. For whatever is done requires money—for printing, postage, clerk hire, traveling expenses, etc.

As I said last week we are not going into picture production or distribution. We are going to protect and control our screens, our theatres, our patrons and our investments.

There is no coercion about this. You do not have to book a Universal or any other Industrial if you don't want to. No committee is going to decide for you what you should or should not book, but—

Every such picture worthy of your consideration will carry as a trailer the corporate seal of your own organization, the M. P. E. A., Inc.

Let's book these pictures under this arrangement and give them a thorough try-out. Industrial and Educational Films are with us to stay. If we can show them profitably let us do so. If not, let us find it out, quick!

My forty theatres are open to a thorough test of the plan.

I invite further comments and suggestions from our members.

Yours truly,

Independence at Last!

The First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., invites Exhibitors, great and small to share its power, Progress and Prosperity

The New Franchise Plan which makes a Motion Picture Theatre a safe thing to own

Benefits for Exhibitors

The new individual non-competitive franchises for all First National attractions will give exhibitors big money-making attractions at a fixed, fair, percentage of the valuation of each negative—thus eliminating the evil of competitive bidding between exhibitors and guaranteeing complete independence to exhibitor franchise holders. Under this plan the owner of the small theatre will pay a definite percentage, as will the big, first run man, while still retaining freedom of action so far as other attractions are concerned.

The holders of First National sub-franchises will have behind them the combined support of the entire nation-wide organization. The mighty purchasing power of several thousand theatres will guarantee an even better and more profitable line of attractions than that so far secured by the pooled buying power of the original First National franchise holders. And exhibitors know that, release for release, First National attractions have more than held their own at the box-office against all comers.

A Cash Business

Conducted by showmen who know the game and have made a success of it. The new plan will be financed by the box-offices of its franchise holders. This is a cash business. The public pays cash, the exhibitor can pay cash and the Circuit will pay cash to its producers. The profits of the business will go to the exhibitors and producers who earn it.

Benefits to Producers

A new non-competitive distributing organization will be placed at the disposal of worthy producers. Non-competitive because the Circuit is strictly an Exhibiting organization. Producers can feel reassured in the existence of this great theatre organization.

The Circuit's policy of buying the best will be continued. Under the new plan of operation quality, more than ever, will be the demand made on producers.

Showmen for the Show Business

First National's phenomenal success has been the result of intelligent cooperation. There is no guess work about the new plan. Its success is already secured. Experienced showmen, exhibitors who have won success in the picture business and know its every angle, are at the helm.

We realize that our success is inextricably tied up with that of every independent exhibitor, large or small. Justice to all is our battle cry—Independence, our watchword.

TIMES BLDG,, NEW YORK CITY

OF MERCHANT SHIPS

Warning, Exhibitors!—

THE failure of the United States Senate to pass the treaty of peace has so smashed the rate of money exchange that our European picture market is absolutely closed to us. It was the vast income from this market that enabled American studios to produce the finest pictures in the world; pictures which converted every class of people into movie fans.

Unless you immediately get busy and force the Senate to pass the Peace Treaty, one of two disasters is certain to befall you.

Either the manufacturer must cut his production costs to make up as far as he can for the loss of his European income, or he must pass the deficit along to you in the form of greatly increased rentals.

The first will kill off your patronage, reducing it to its early level, and force you to lower your admission price—and the second will kill off your profits.

This is not a dream—just use your thinker a moment and work it out for yourselves:—

DURING the war, when European production was closed down, we secured a virtual monopoly of the market. It means billions of dollars to us. England alone pays over $100,000 for one of our big pictures. $30,000 is a common price. The Continent is good for $50,000 more and has not yet reached anything like its capacity. That's for one picture. The total income of one concern for one year during the war, when European trade was only half alive, was nearly $3,000,000.

Could Mr. Griffith or Mr. Famous Players or Mr. Goldwyn or Mr. Big Independent Producer continue to buy twenty-five thousand dollar stories—pay fabulous sums to artists and directors and advertise their pictures for you in the Saturday Evening Post and kindred publications at $6,000 per page without the European velvet? Yes, they could—if you the exhibitor made up the difference. And that is the only way they could possibly do it.

The fall in the rate of exchange has made it impossible for Europe to buy from us. Our foreign film trade is dead. In the meantime Europe is wild for amusement. Theatres are packed and new ones going up everywhere.

And the only thing on earth that can brace up the rate of exchange so that trade can be resumed, is the extension of loans and credits to Europe, and this cannot be done until the peace treaty is passed by the U. S. Senate and the war officially ended. Simple enough but—

While we are waiting for the Senate to pass the treaty and restore our necessary trade, European producers are hustling night and day to get back the market for themselves by turning out better pictures. Several have imported American directors who will introduce American methods. Unless we act quickly the marvelous advantage we obtained during the war will be wiped out and there'll be only a meagre competitive market left.

Do you see what this means to you, Exhibitor? You will eventually pay the price unless you reopen our European trade now, while there is yet time to hold and develop it. But you must do your part. Wire your Senator right now. Simply say that the motion picture industry demands the immediate passage of the Peace Treaty and sign your name and the name of your theatre. Have your employees and patrons do the same. If you don't know your Senator's name, 'phone your local paper or look in the World Almanac—but do it today. Make your message as strong as you like, and get it off to Washington P. D. Q. This action has nothing in the world to do with politics—the future of the whole industry is at stake. We are doing our part—do yours and do it now.

The New Year

¶ There is every indication that 1920 will prove a rip-snorting year for this industry.

It is already moving along with break-neck speed.

Some traditions are due for an upsetting; some new trade alignments will be made. Already there is considerable dust in the air and there will be more, as former trade edifices are levelled low, new ground broken and new buildings erected.

This is the time of the year to indulge in forecasts, to step lightly upon the threshold of the new year and telescope the horizon.

Never before has the opportunity been so interesting.

We are inclined, first of all, to be most optimistic, like Mr. Schwab who outlines a broad prosperity for the country after some nearby rapids and whirlpools have been safely passed.

The picture business, we believe, is more certain of prosperity and less liable to temporary relapses than other industries.

Secondly we cannot but see ahead of us an open market; and that means healthfulness for the industry at large and opportunity for each unit and individual, through independent effort and fair competition.

¶ What have we to start with?

First, there is the influx of large capital. The largest financial houses in America are now, directly or indirectly, heavy stockholders in pictures and picture theatres. Opposing this move, other factors in the business are increasing their capital from within the picture business, which has been exceedingly prosperous.

In any event we have entered the big industry class. Whatever else this new capital may signify it means bigness and power because money has this power. We shall move forward with bolder strokes, not the least of which will be national advertising, direct to the public, and done on an ever increasing scale.

Secondly, we shall have international growth and competition.

We have been making the world's pictures, with comparative ease. Great Britain now proposes to do just this, and France and Italy will soon enter the lists. They will even go after our own home market.

This new and spirited competition also means growth. It means better pictures and broader markets. The best and truest force back of the picture, be it always remembered, is competition—the competition not alone of the best minds of this country but of those of the world. It is just this spur and this indispensably that makes for higher art and greater breadth and truth of expression.

So to be true to our ideals, to be true to the picture, we want open competition in the making of pictures not only here but throughout the world.

Another big factor under way this year is the picture in the church. Fourteen thousand community centers in this country have taught the church that the people prefer pictures. And the church proposes to have pictures. There is a vast reorganization on within the church, of which, perhaps, the new interdenominational movement is the most striking sign; and in this reorganization pictures will play the uppermost part.

Here is a force to reckon with. The picture is too powerful to be circumscribed. We cannot hold it to our dramatic field any more than you can limit type, for instance, to fiction. What effect then will the church have upon the present production and exhibition of pictures; what new alignment will result?

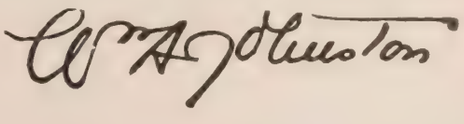
¶ To revert to our present business, we believe that the most important developments, this year, will be:

First, quality in production. Fifty million people in this country are mostly asking one question of the picture: why can't it be better? And we who make them know the one answer: we can't make them better when we make so many.

There will be many more producers this year. They will come from the ranks of directors. Each will make fewer and better pictures, not alone for art's sake but because it is as plain as the nose on your face that these are the pictures that make money.

Secondly, there will be a cooperative tie-up between producers and exhibitors. Some will laugh at this: but the long-headed ones, in each group, know that it is inevitable. The business has grown big and beyond the petty distrust and antagonism of the past. Those whose trade interests are identical are eventually drawn together As with manufacturers and retailers in other businesses so we shall have dealer cooperation in this.

If only this important result is accomplished in 1920 the year will stand out in our trade history.



In An Editorial Vein

A New Note in Trade Paper Service

IN this issue we present a census of the leading dailies of this country, with brief information pertinent to their cooperation locally with pictures and picture theatres.

This census is the result of our direct contact with these papers for the past several years, in an effort to bring the picture and the newspaper closer together in each other's interest.

In the beginning there was little cooperation. Except for Seattle and a few other outstanding cities the newspapers held aloof and there was a general misunderstanding of the structure of this trade and of the large part the photoplay must surely play in newspaper circulation and advertising.

In a series of exhaustive articles covering the leading cities of the country we reviewed the local papers and gave straight from the shoulder comparisons, criticisms and suggestions.

In several important instances these articles resulted in the establishment of photoplay departments. Others were enlarged and improved. We conducted, in this connection, a service department, and supplied a number of newspapers directly with photoplay material.

In the beginning we made a special effort to place Motion Picture News in the hands of the newspaper photoplay editor. Many will testify how freely news material from its columns is used. Later we issued the Studio Directory, largely for the newspapers, so that biographical material on the photoplayers would stand at the editor's right hand throughout the year.

As exhibitor advertising was developed we added the "Complete Plan Book" with full advertising material in each feature release. With this important new feature we got the "News" into the business office of the newspaper so that advertising layouts and copy could be prepared for the exhibitor. We urged, through correspondence, upon each newspaper, the establishment of a service department to do this work well and regularly. Several large dailies have reported to us their success in this respect. One Eastern daily, by this means, raised its theatrical advertising from $6,000 to over $50,000 a year.

Today Motion Picture News and its Studio Directory serve three hundred and fifteen dailies in one hundred and twenty-nine cities with a gross circulation of nearly nine million.

It has been a big, sincere effort and we are proud of it. The full story will be told later in these pages. We only claim, in this important effort toward national publicity for pictures, the part a trade paper could play: but the work we have done to this end was, and still is, a new note in the entire field of the trade paper.

In 1914 we welcomed editorially the first advertising campaign on pictures direct to the public. Today, when this has become established as one of the biggest and most constructive elements in the advancement of the picture, the "News" is a central factor in the work.

Some Good Things Coming

THERE'S one good thing about Holiday Numbers. The last minute "crowding" operation that attempts to cram into an issue already too bulky for mail comfort always holds over a lot of material that brightens up the following issue.

Next week, for instance, we will publish a letter from Carl Laemmle on the "key city" problem that will start more fun than a Tipperary fair.

A number of letters are on hand to add fuel to the percentage discussion; Sidney Cohen is with us in warm approval of the "Don't Be Buffaloed" editorial.

Investigations by First National have resulted in an article on the average length of film runs that is both concrete and interesting.

Yes, there are lots of good things in store for next week. And, maybe, a surprise or two.

Pro and Con on Percentage

FEW editorial topics of recent months have elicited interest equal to that aroused by the Motion Picture News discussion on the subject of percentage booking.

Manufacturers and producers are quick to arise at the call of "Percentages!" Realizing that there is at present a vast discrepancy between the gross amount paid by the public for screen entertainment and the sum that finally reaches the producer, they would appreciate any step that lead toward a better "split."

Exhibitors are equally willing to express their opinions on percentage—but they are of one mind in saying that no method of percentage booking now in vogue offers an opportunity for universal adoption.

Isn't it possible that from somewhere in the army of exhibitors and producers we can secure a concrete suggestion towards a basis of percentage divisions?

In the old days of the "legit" the basis was almost standard. "Sixty-five; thirty-five," was common, and variations depended solely on the drawing power of certain stars. But overhead on the "op'ry houses" was at a fixed minimum; the legitimate producer paid for bill-posting, he supplied an advance man, little was asked of the theatre manager except his house.

Also, it must be added, the overhead of the producer of "spoken drama" attached itself in large size to each performance; the picture producer can split his over some half-hundred or more prints—and "the foreign market."

The owner of a picture theatre faces different problems. Advertising costs vary as widely as the poles; house overhead must in some cases include symphony orchestras and soloists, in others it calls for no more than a few salaries.

What is the answer?

Will it ever be possible to reach a standard basis of percentage booking?

Let's hear from our readers. They are the fortunate possessors of the "box office angle" that must always be kept in mind in discussing this problem.

Percentage is coming. It is inevitable. Until it comes, some exhibitors will continue to hold the bag for more fortunate managers who are able to "dictate" rentals; some producers are not receiving their full reward.

Percentage is the only solution. And the solution to percentage can only be reached through open discussion from all sides; free airing of all angles.

"Let's start the ball rolling!"

Of Interest to All

EXHIBITORS are as vitally interested in the accomplishment of an early declaration of peace and the consequent opportunity to solve foreign exchange problems as are the producers.

Continued crippling of the foreign market can have but one effect—a reflex of added expense on the domestic business. Speedy opening up of the world market will furnish grounds for a readjustment at home.

It is well worth the while of every exhibitor to write a letter—or a telegram—to his representatives in Congress urging the early ratification of the peace treaty, with or without reservations. The question is not one of politics. Let the politicians bicker and swap as they please—so long as they finish their job.

Write your representative: "Business demands an early peace. Business will take care of readjustment problems if you will take care of business. Let's have less politics; or else we'll have fewer politicians."

Film Personalities

WELL, it was a live and sizzling week, boys. To start with we had two joyous jobs combined in one—the return to the large size page and an honest to goodness Holiday Number, overflowing with advertising and crammed with text.

Remember last year's holiday season?

Wasn't it tame compared to this year's festive period?

Why some of the pessimists in our midst were declaring that "the picture business is finally settling down."

Oh, boy! If this is settling down show us to a sanitarium!

A year ago one company seemed to have most of the first runs, most of the stars, 'most everything. Today—every single company seems to have more first runs, more stars and more of everything coming their way.

And cries of battle rend the air.

Yea, verily, if this is settling down then Lubin will soon be releasing through the Big Four.

HONEST—cross your heart—aren't you glad to see the large size Motion Picture News again? Didn't you sort of "forget" during those weeks in the small size just what the weekly visit of Motion Picture News used to mean?

Getting back to the big sizes makes us feel great because we realize every minute that we are able to give you so much better service than we were forced to during the strike period.

And say isn't it some feat to come back with a two hundred and two page advertising week?

Is it any wonder that we say "it has been a live and sizzling week!"

Two hundred and two pages! That's "Covering the Field."

SOME of the fun of the week was due to our own thoughtlessness. In an idle moment we dashed off a letter to the press agents daring them to send us their organizations' Christmas greetings and forecasts—and to keep their screeds within a hundred words.

The emphasis in the dare was laid on the hundred words.

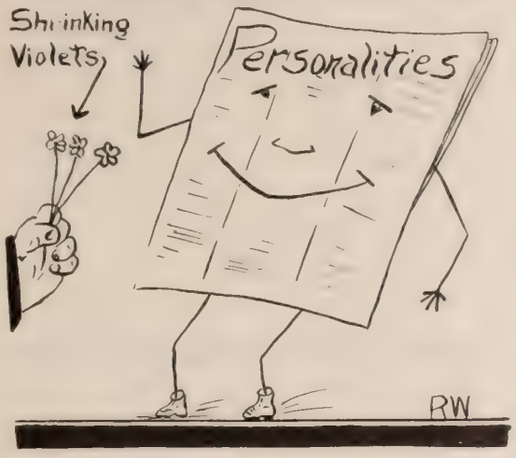
What a hornet's nest we stepped into!

We should have known better—after a period of motion picture blue-penciling that is approaching the ten-year mark.

One hundred words!

Gosh, what trouble we started! "Bill" Yearsley "spoofs" us in his reply to the effect that we used one hundred and sixty-three words to request statements limited to a hundred.

You don't know the worst, Bill. It took us two thousand and sixty-three words over the telephone to convince some of the boys that we meant what we said.



As the official "ballyhoo" page of the NEWS we hand ourselves a Christmas present

They couldn't believe it.

All except Randolph Lewis. "Randy" called up to say that he had only used thirty-one words and was willing to donate the balance of his hundred to a home for crippled rewrite men.

Joe Reddy was so overwhelmed with "Randy's" unexpected ability to compress words into space that he went out and bought his boss a leather medal.

YES, that hundred word idea sure did start something in the way of action. Lee Kugle wanted to know if we could use a hundred words that didn't even mention the name of his company. Before we could recover he countered by saying, "Of, course, the name of the company will be in the heading and the signature, won't it?"

Then we knew that he was only fooling us.

Ralph Block hit us with gentle Goldwyn sarcasm. After we had used a typewritten page to make our dare he countered with this thirteen word message: "Enclosed please find response to your 'dare.' It is just one hundred words."

Joe Kelly countered from Hallmark with a plaintive note: "It's the toughest job I have been assigned to since signing up with Frank G. Hall and leaving the Royal at 'Empy' News. After a dozen or more return dates with the Underwood, I have succeeded in holding myself and Webster down to less than a hundred words."

John P. Fritts, of Realart, looked on the matter in a different light. He wrote: "Your hundred word leash does not embarrass the new Realart puppy. Like all aristocrats and well-bred canines he was taught early in life to come to heel promptly when ordered."

After which he added:

"This Realart puppy has had a very happy and prosperous babyhood and the hunting has been fine indeed. As old Father Time swings into 1920 the young thoroughbred hopes to gain his mature stride in stalking big game. So, by the time the New Year wanes, there should be a record number of pelts decorating the walls of the home kennel. And flashing across the ethereal blue, just overhead, may be discerned the true Realart spirit, so well exemplified by 'The Girl in the Swing' as being over and above all.'

BUT we'll say that the boys finally came through. Which only goes to show that even though their newspaper days are some distance behind they can, under pressure, get back in memory to the city editor days.

Some came through under the hundred word mark; others crept over. Sam Palmer compromised with his conscience by sending a photo of Al Lichtman along with the statement.

All things considered, we feel that a score card is necessary. So here's the dope on the scribes and the number of words they needed to reach the nineteenth hole. One hundred words is par.

Randolph Lewis	32	Sam Palmer	136
Harry Reichenbach	119	Lee Kugel	166
Ralph Block	100	Joe Kelley	88
S. S. Hutchison	118	J. P. Fritts	122
Rothacker	111	L. Mayer	94
B. M. Conlon	92	Robertson-Cole	115
C. L. Yearsley	100

Harry Reichenbach had the nerve to send his forward with the statement that "enclosed is the effusion you requested."

The idea of a hundred word "effusion" from Harry!

WE feel rather tickled to give you that thirteen-page newspaper directory with this issue. Those who have seen the advance proofs have cheered us with their praise.

There's only one regret we have about the whole job. And that is that "Bob" Pritchard is not still on the NEWS when this evidence of service makes its appearance. Pritchard it was who instituted the investigations that made the directory possible and who carried on his shoulders the arduous labors incident to the first stage of its preparation.

Some day we are going to get "Bob" Pritchard to take a few minutes off from his Allen circuit job and review for us the early days of the Service Bureau's work to increase newspaper cooperation. The job is still being carried on, but it was in those ice-breaking days that it was particularly trying.

NOT having a Sporting Department we are considerably handicapped in covering one of the snappiest news stories of the week. But we can always fall back on the "ticker." That stepbrother of the flimsy reports it this way:

Abe and Mawruss Go

Montague Glass presented Abe and Mawruss with two weeks leave of absence to enjoy the holidays. Being business men—you know how it is—they sought ad interim salaries. And we had the jobs.

'Go out and interview the film magnates," we said. "Ask them what they think of the coming year and what they know about the past year. Get plenty of facts—and don't accept any photographs. Our readers know the photos so well they are calling us names."

So Abe and Mawruss fared forth. And yesterday they met in front of 729 to talk it over.

¶ "This fillum business," says Abe, "is just like the cloak and suit game, only the styles change twice as fast. Just now Wall Street cut on the bias is all the vogue, while cooperation trimmings is affected by many of the socially elected."

"ABE," said Mawruss, "this here interviewing business ain't what it's cracked up to be. Nu, I know why it is these here trading papers ain't always got it no more pep than an exchange schnorrer making it an allowance on a rental, because, y'unnerstand, it rained the night of the show und besides the print it didn't arrive for two days, which was Sunday, yet, and the city was Albany.

"There, Mawruss, y'know, Sunday shows is against the law, und so there ain't no Sunday shows. Aber, when it comes to perhibition Albany is just so thirsty as the United States. Which, Mawruss, as a regular reporter might sagt it, only goes to show that 'Laws is laws except.'

"Aber, Mawruss, your interructions has got me far ge-moved from my subject. I started to say it nu I know why those trading papers sometimes look so dead as the Gotthem Film Corporation.

"Mawruss, s'helpme, jeder one of them there magnuts I interviewed met me with arms as wide open as some fillum company's booking was going to be zwei months ago only nu it ain't. Rightaway, Mawruss, they sagen mir everything. They tell me how old their youngest two-year-old boy is, what is their wife's middle name, why their mother-in-law she would rather eat in resterants when she ge-visits New York, und when the company passed the last dividend. Sometimes, Mawruss, they even tell me why. Everything, Mawruss, they make to me so plain as your face.

"Und then—Mawruss? Then? They lean over and touch me on the arm—ya, gemis, sure I'm watching mein watch—aber, they smile und sagen: 'Now don't publish a word of this. Under no circumstances, not a word. This is confidential.'

"Can y'beat it, Mawruss?

"Und then, Mawruss, they tell it me something what I could publish mit full permission und maybe a photograph. Et was, Mawruss, this part would be alright only you know it by heart und you ain't knowing so much of anything at that.

"Nein, Mawruss, this interviewing business ain't no joke, not near so much as some trading paper house ads. The first magnut what I met, Mawruss, was Lewis Selznick. Right here on the spot where you stand I meet him. Und such a welcome!

"'You're a damphool,' he says, Mawruss. Can y'beat it? Und he proves it to me! Ya, Mawruss, if you had been there he'd proved it twice alretty.

"Aber, Mawruss, I know he don't mean it. In my case he couldn't. Besides, Mawruss, I like it this here Selznick. He is frankness personated. Ven some of these other magnuts they give you a pain mit their mystery, Selznick he's a refreshment relief. He speaks right out, Mawruss, from the heart. He don't care if it is in meeting oder in conference he speaks right outright. If you fight him back he likes you for it. Only, that ain't good-nature; it's charity. He's got you licked before you gemenced. When they invented poker, Mawruss, Selznick he had the patents out alretty.

"He says to me for the interviewing: 'With Selznick, Select, Republic, National Theatres and Selznick again to take care of I ain't got much time for interviews. Only this I tell you, the year just past is only the beginning; the year coming is just the start of the finish—and it won't be mine. Outside of that I ain't got nothing to say. Except, perhaps, if you want to buy something. That is a different question. Anything you want to buy, I got it to sell. Good 'big' pictures; good 'medium-sized' pictures; good advertising; good stock. What will you buy?'

"Und then, Mawruss, just because I'm working now on a trade paper and ain't never got the geld to buy anything—then, Mawruss, he says again, 'Don't forget, you're a damphool.'

"Just as if I could, Mawruss!

"The next feller I meet, Mawruss, is Mr. Zukor. In front of Mr. Loew's New York teayter it was I met him. Right away, again, Mawruss, I get in bad. Mr. Zukor he is counting something, only I don't know it, und when I ask for an interview he gets all balled up. The stock market ain't recovered yet from my effects. Right up he speaks: 'I deny it. I ain't bought the Astor Hotel for a theater. Mr. Loew can have his New York; I got my Putnam Building.'

"What it is about, Mawruss, I don't know no more as you. Und I ask him to interview on what he thinks of the past year—only to tame it down for publication—und he says, 'Selective booking is here to stay. And it's a good stayer. As to the future, that will take care of itself. We'll help it a lot with National Advertising, and I see that lots of the fellers who used to say I was crazy with National Advertising are now boasting that they are crazier than I am about it. Outside of the craziness there ain't anything in the picture business to talk about. Only don't forget Selective Booking. Some people have.'

"Which, Mawruss, ain't much of an interview to give that there news editor. Still another place I didn't have no more luck than a tank town exhibiter who expects his serial episoders from the exchange in ein, zwei, drei order. Aber, Mawruss, y'know it ain't never so. There are in this country nineteen million three hundred and seventy-nine thousand peoples and some exhibitors who think that the villain is immer killed along about the fifth or sixth episoder und the rest are just added on to make it harder yet.

"One teayter, Mawruss, in Arizona, finished 'The Adventurings vun Kathlyn' seven years ago und they ain't even played the first episoder yet. Und the exhibitor is so sore, Mawruss, he says if the express company don't find the fillum soon he'll cancel his General Fillum Service und go over to Mutual. Und if another summer visitor don't come through his town soon with a copy vun a trading paper he'll write a letter to J. J. Kennedy about his rotten treatment.

"Aber, Mawruss, I started to tell you about my hard luck on the next interview. In Mr. Hodkinson's office I found such a busyness, Mawruss. Mit his left hand he was writing a history of the film industrious; mit his right he was reading thousands of exhibitors letters, which sagen, 'You told 'em so!' On the other hand, Mawruss, he was smiling so broadly mit the prospects und the outlook that I saw there was no more time for an interview than there are idler days on a Chaplin print.

"On the way out I stopped in Fred Warren's office, und there it was worser. 'Interview?' sie sagen. 'I ain't got no time for interviews. I'm selling products, not interviews. Product, product, product!'

"Since I ain't no customer, Mawruss, I back out quick. Just so quick as a fillum salesman after the dotted line has been decorated alretty. There ain't no more talk needed, enough is genug.

"Down Fifth Avenue I walk, which ain't no place for a fillum schnorrer only it's getting more so. Und who should I meet, Mawruss, faced to face, but Mr. Goldwyn.

Interviewing For Us

"'Save me, Mr. Goldwyn,' I beg him. 'Give it me an interview. So far I've been working all day und I've had so much luck as an Irisher salesman in Cincinnati.'

"'Sorry,' says Mr. Goldwyn, 'but I ain't got time for interviews. Mr Du Pont and I are going up to see "Jinx" at the Capitol. If we like the picture as well as exhibitors do we may buy the theatre. You never can tell. Pictures, theatres, Wall Street, authors—they all look alike to us if we like 'em. Do you know of anything I can say to make Zukor mad? If you think of anything wire it to Sid Grauman. And send it collect. I dare you to use a hundred words. Good-day.'

"I give it to you, Mawruss, word for word. There I stand on Fifth Avenue mit the day gone und not an interview yet. Aber, Mawruss, that Fifth Avenue air is great for thinking. I think a lot there, Mawruss. Ya, I know you wouldn't believe it, but it's true even if it is uninteresting. I think at least once or twice there."

"Und one thing I think is this, Mawruss, the fillum business is just like the cloak and suit game only the styles change twice as fast. Just now Wall Street cut on the bias is all the wogue, aber, cooperation trimmings is very much affected by the socially elected. Just so quick the styles change. Only the other day it was Open Market fronts, mit closed backs. Onced y' had to say 'Advance Deposit' und yell in a loud tone oder you couldn't get admitted to society. Now there ain't no more adwance deposits, instead the exhibitors are using the same money to buy stock and get it a dividend.

"There I stand on Fifth Avenue, Mawruss, muttering Wall Street, cooperation, assosinations, und more Wall Street und who walks up but J. D. Williams.

"'Wall Street,' he sagt, like a bull in the automat, 'Wall Street? There ain't nothing to it.'

"I agree with him. Nur, I think that street has a good press agent, und if Hester Street hired the same guy we'd been making money yet. Aber, Mr. Williams he comes it back at me:

"'We exhibitors und the exhibitors are going to smash Wall Street higher than a kited fillum stock,' he continuates. 'You can let them have their Wall Street, just so long as we got it the Main Streets. There's more real money on the million Main Streets than Wall Street ever used fer incorporation papers.'

"Mawruss, he's gecited about it. So much I walk down the street talking to myself. Just as I'm sagen I must get it a first run on Wall Street for our new serialler I bumps into Dick Rowland. He hears me und he laughs. Mawruss. Right at my face, he laughs.

¶ "Abe," says Mawruss, "that feller what prophesied the end of the world is in bed mit a lot of fillum fellers. But you and me knew it was too good to be true. We couldn't get such a favor of a booking mitout advance deposits und y'know it."

"'Rats,' he sagt. 'Und more rats. I'm spending my time making it pictures, which don't leave no loft space for high financings. If y'know where there is it another Nazimova let me know. I will gepreciate it. Only be careful mit your spelling. Petrova don't spell it Nazimova. Not by a damsite. Good-day. I got a lunch mit Maxwell Karger to find it what kind of Nauseated Iron tonic this here Overhead takes. So long.

"From Rowland I go away, Mawruss, fulled mit optimism and good cheer. This here feller Rowland, he's so snappy und free he always makes you feel so good as an Oshkosh exhibitor mit a personal appearance of Charlie Chaplin, und Mary Pickford waiting in the audience in case Charlie he don't show up.

"I feel so brave, Mawruss, I tackle Pat Powers mit a leading questioner. 'Pat,' I sagt. 'Do you believe in equity in the fillum business?' Up rightaway he roars, Mawruss. Then he smiles und says, 'Take this thought home to your sister's grandchildren, "All the raw stock in the fillum business ain't taxed by the foot."'

"What he means, Mawruss, I don't know. I am still wondering about it when I walk into Bill Fox's office. There, Mawruss, is a madhouse of industry. Mr. Fox, Mr. Sheehan, Mr. Robbins, Mr. Zanft, Mr. James, oy, a half dozen more of them is conferencing and reporting at one time. Only it is a dozen different conferences und Bill Fox is the only guy in every one. Except his barber, which is shaving him at the desk und he is in on all the secrets.

"Quickly I back out, Mawruss. It ain't no place fer a schnorrer like me. From out all the conwersation I learn that Bill is just bought it five new teayters, started three masterpieces, built two studioers, and taken an option on a teayter in Mesepotamia. Besides he had time to tip the barber, cause I seen it, Mawruss.

"In Pathe's office, Mawruss, I find it more quiet. Mr. Brunet und Mr. Quimby they meet me mit smiles. Mr. Pathe he conwersations mit me fer ten minutes just so friendly like und then when I mention it interview he sends fer the interpreter. Aber, I learn before I leave that Associnated Teayters is more und more associnated every day. There's big money in seriallers, I hear, if y'make big seriallers. Und so it goes.

"Y'know, Mawruss, y'can't never always tell about things in this here fillum business. Y'remember onst when we almost made a lot of money seeing as how we were booking first runs on those Dempsey-Willard fighting pictures und the lawyers they stops us? Then, I thought it Frank Hall would join him the Anty-Saloon and Prize Fighter League, aber, Mawruss, when I go to his office fer the interview what should I find but a punching bag und Mr. Hall he is in training mit Benny Leonard. Interviews there was nix, Mawruss, cause I couldn't unnerstand it that langwidge about jabs, und pokes, and right swings followed by left turns and shimmies to the plexus, He talks a lot, Mawruss, but it didn't done me no good.

"The same result, almost. I get it at Vitagraph. Mr. Quinn he meets me like a gentleman und he talks mit friendliness, aber, he says, no interviews. Bill Wright, he's an old pal, und he makes me feel just so much at home as an Educational picture at the Rivioli, aber he says the picture business in general can take care of itself und he won't talk nothing but Vitagraph.

"Aber, Mawruss, what kind of luck did you have?"

"Luck, Abe, you should say it luck. You should say a couple of horseshoes. I was told to interview Mr. Laemmle. Und Mr. Laemmle, Mawruss, he comes back mit a three-page letter. Und that letter! Fire, dynamite, hot scorchers, und everything.

"I think it myself it won't do so well as a interview, und I show it to that NEWS editor. 'Abe,' he sagt. 'Y're a wunner. Next week I feature it this letter and the NEWS will be sold out in ten minutes. Tell it your friends to watch for this letter next week. It's a humdingery.'"

Vitagraph

"VITAGRAPH is in the Standard Dictionary. It is described as the writing of life. It is the oldest film producing company in America. It has made most of the stars on the screen today. There are exhibitors who seldom book anything but Vitagraph pictures.

Vitagraph in this Christmas season begs to thank its millions of friends for their goodwill; and to assure them that it will strive through the new year, as in the past, to put the writing of life in vital, graphic burning, beautiful visual forms on many a screen."

We Dared Them To

Robertson-Cole

To The American Exhibitors:

"CONGRATULATIONS: You have ably accomplished your part in the financial and artistic development of the motion picture industry, in the year 1919

We have faithfully and earnestly endeavored to achieve the best in production and distribution. We have kept every promise we have made.

For 1920 we pledge the donation of our every financial and artistic resource to the production of ever greater and ever better pictures.

With the determination that the square deal shall dominate business relations, that the only fair price is the live and let-live return, and that the best pictures are the only acceptable ones, we are confident our joint interests will prosper to the utmost."

A. S. KIRKPATRICK,.

Universal

"THE year 1920 is going to mark a new epoch in the moving picture industry, and along with other important changes which I am confident will take place, there will be a decided trend upward in the production of pictures."

This statement comes from Carl Laemmle, president of Universal.

Continuing, Mr. Laemmle says: "Huge sums of money will be spent by the producers next year, and pictures of surpassing excellence will be the rule rather than the exception.

"Speaking for Universal, I can say that it has been our policy to put all the money a production will stand into its making. As an example, I may cite "Blind Husbands". When Eric Stroheim first discussed this picture with me, he set a figure at which he believed the production could be made. As a matter of fact it cost more than ten times the amount he originally specified.

"Universal has adopted 'quality' as its watchword, and we will not stint in bringing all our productions up to the highest possible standard of perfection."

CARL LAEMMLE,

¶Holiday messages usually look so long-winded that we don't believe you exhibitors read a word of them. We thought we could produce both a Service and a Novelty by daring the boys to keep their greetings and forecasts within a hundred words—and these two pages are the answer. After reading these expressions you will probably agree with us that they have said a whole lot more in one hundred words than you ever read in a thousand of publicity junk.

First National

"MOTION PICTURE NEWS uses one hundred and sixty-three words to request a Holiday statement of one hundred words. Failing in respect for its own dictum, it asks we who revel in words to turn supermen and succeed where the noble Editor fails.

Beware the trap! One hundred word statements, now or later, establish a precedent. It is a subtle legislation for word and space conservation.

Of promises we have but one, to do our best.

For wishes, the boss has heard the most important.

To everyone—A Merry Christmas and a New Year of prosperity and happiness.

One hundred."

Goldwyn

C. L. YEARSLEY, Dir. of Publicity,

"WE accept your dare. We can be brief and pointed. Here goes: Goldwyn Pictures are the Best—the Best in Stories, the Best in Stars, the Best in Directors, the Best in Photography, the Best in lighting, the Best in settings, the Best in entertainment value, the Best in box office results, the Best in advertising possibilities, the Best in building up a steady patronage for your theatre, the Best in making new converts to motion pictures. Altogether, you may gather from these 100 words that Goldwyn Pictures are the Best that money can buy. Merry Christmas-Happy New Year."

Select

"THE absolute futility of combining the production of pictures, their distribution and the operation of theatres will become apparent during the coming year to such organizations as are trying to practice this herculean task.

The organizations that attempt this precarious method, whereby they hope to reap financial returns from each respective source, can result in only one thing—FAILURE. It has been tried in commercial enterprises where manufacturers of wearing apparel attempted to operate distributing stores and sell direct to the general trade. They found and still find the undertaking impossible.

No organization, however gigantic, has sufficient funds nor can they secure enough money to control a sufficient number of theatres to make it profitable to produce pictures for such theatres alone. The great mass of exhibitors, disturbed by an attempt to monopolize their part of the industry, will resent the invasion of their field by refusing to accept productions from such companies.

The supply of pictures in no way meets the demand and there is sufficient profit for the producer and distributor who limits his activities to that particular branch of the business, and that alone."

LEWIS J. SELZNICK.

Famous Players

"THE coming year is going to be the greatest in the history of motion pictures.

"A worn-out Holiday bromideom," you may think.

But I'll tell you why it's going to be the greatest.

It isn't because the war is over—that helps, of course.

It isn't because everybody has money—that helps, too.

It's because the industry has awakened to Say It In 100 Words

the power of NATIONAL ADVERTISING.

Announcements of national campaigns have been dominating the trade papers' news pages for weeks.

It means more competition—not in the mere spending of money but in selling pictures.

It means business, prosperity, long life to the industry if—

The performance backs up the promise.

Not 1920, but 1921 will provide the test—when the promises of the coming year are weighed in the balance.

Tell the world!

Then make good."

AL LICHTMAN, Gen. Mgr. of Dist.,

Rothacker

"I ONLY wish I could say it to everybody personally—MERRY CHRISTMAS!

And I hope all of you—each and every one of you—will have as prosperous a 1920 as I know the Rothacker concern is going to have.

Our 1920 program:—

Doubling of capacity of Chicago studio-laboratory. Erection of similar plants in Los Angeles, New York and London.

Maintaining the lead in production of industrial films—that branch of motion pictures in which our company was pioneer.

Three releases—the "Outdoors Series" and two new ones, "The Rothacker Industrial-log" and "The Rothacker Review."

A special six-reel feature which I shall present personally to the trade."

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER,

Real Art

"THREE great Stars.

Special productions by two of the world's greatest directors and more to be announced soon.

Initial releases breaking all attendance records, with a box-office pull which is inspiring scores of enthusiastic messages from exhibitors.

Nearly two million dollars in contracts before a single release.

From an executive force of two men and stenographers on June 15, to present personnel of nearly two hundred.

Home Office covering ten thousand square feet of de luxe Fifth Avenue space.

Twenty-one branches in principal cities, giving an exhibition of team work in selling without precedent.

Outlook for 1920? Well, that's mighty promising. There's a smashing announcement coming very soon about some new tieups that will command the earnest attention of all exhibitors."

MORRIS KOHN, Treas.,

Equity

"EQUITY will endeavor to deliver to its franchise holders one hundred cents worth of public pulling, patron provoking, publicity propelling productions for every dollar received. No self-advertising cost for stunts which must be paid by exhibitor. Consumer will be indulged in cooperation, coordinating in localities simultaneous with release. This will be keynote of our efforts.

We will synchronize our productions with public demand, casts will be unexcelled, stories subtle yet simple, potent and poignant. Our executive fingers will be ever on the pulse of our exhibitors and patrons and when the pressure is lowest our eagerness will be highest. We are youthful, brainy, experienced, unselfish, altruistic and willing to share our prosperity with every client no matter how humble."

H. K. SOMBORN, Pres.,

American

"WHILE the youngsters are looking in their stockings this week to see what Santa Claus has brought them, the exhibitor is eagerly examining the New Year announcements to see what 1920 holds for him in the way of big feature attractions. The American Film Company aims to give him the greatest offerings in 1920 that have ever borne the "Flying A" trade mark—Pictures exceeding in quality those already announced—made from stories by the world's greatest authors—enacted by casts specially chosen for individual ability—staged by the foremost directors of the profession. In addition, American expects to astonish the trade with a star of international renown who will appear for the first time under the American banner."

SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON, Pres.,

Hallmark

WE accept the dare of MOTION PICTURE NEWS to grasp the hand of the motion picture exhibitor in Xmas and New Years' Greetings and to tell him—not that Hallmark Pictures Corporation is going to give him million dollar pictures during the new year but that it is going to give him pictures with which he can make a million dollars if he plays them "across the board", calling all "bluffs". Pictures of quality, by Famous Directors with box-office attraction and dramatic punch. Hallmark is with you.

FRANK G. HALL,

Louis Mayer

THE average press agent would probably prefer a cell in Sing Sing to being limited to one hundred words in expressing his views on any given subject. I've already used about thirty without saying anything, so you see how difficult it is. However, to the great army of exhibitors who have given such enthusiastic support to Louis B. Mayer's policy of Big Star, Big Play, Big Director and Big Cast we extend sincere gratitude and best wishes for a Merry Christmas, a Happy and Prosperous New Year. Just made it in the hundred.

W. H. LEAHY, Publicity Director,
Louis B. Mayer Productions.

Pathe

"PATHE Exchange, Inc., has been the leader in establishing the most satisfactory relations with the exhibitor and the producer. The New Year will mark the very heighth of its carefully planned achievement."

News of the Week

Black Takes Exception to Ad Statement

Furthering his announcement of last week concerning the contract entered into by the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America and the Industrial and Educational Department of Universal, Alfred S. Black has issued an additional statement. In part he says:

"Hundred of letters now on my desk are abundant proof of the tact that motion picture exhibitors will at all times keep their screens entirely within their own conrol, and that they will not permit any organization or alleged organization to dictate what they shall run or what they shall not run, or to exercise any other form of censorship.

"My attention has been called to an advertisement appearing in the issue of Printers' Ink of December 11th which reminds me of the 'Three Little Tailors of Tooley Street' who started off their public statement, according to Charles Dickens, 'We the people of England.' In this Printers' Ink advertisement they announced to the world at large that all the educational and industrial pictures manufactured must pass through the hands of a half a dozen men who set themselves up as 'The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America'. As everyone knows there is no such legitimate organization in existence and any half dozen men in any industry who set themselves up to create a monopoly are certainly facing disaster. But in this case a disaster will not be great for the excellent reason that these half dozen men have nothing worth while to lose.

"The contract of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc. with Harry Levey, general manager of the Industrial and Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, set forth in the advertising pages of this journal last week and in my official statement, speaks for itself."

Forced Closing Costly to Omaha Theatres

Obeying the mandate of the local fuel board to close all theatres in Omaha during the coal strike, and to allow (what the board saw fit to call essentials) the operating of other industries and places of business, has caused a loss to theatre owners and managers, conservatively estimated, of $150,000.

SERVICE BUREAU

DON'T start to kick when you don't find the Exhibitor Service Bureau in its accustomed place. It starts on Page 252 this week. Page after page of live exploitation suggestions.

And say—you're due for a surprise when you see the Service Bureau in those large-size pages again! Gosh, but it looks great.

But not half as good as it is going to look before this coming year is over. We have scores of plans for increased service and innovations.

Watch the Service Bureau from week to week.

Wharton Here With Features

Veteran Producer Expects to Fill a Long Felt Want with New Productions

WHEN Leo Wharton, identified with motion picture production since the industry's infancy, and Macklyn Arbuckle, stage and screen star of excellent fame, disappeared from Eastern film circles some nine months ago it was to take up an indefinite residence in San Antonio, Texas. The invasion of the Lone Star State was for the purpose of making feature photoplays in which the rotund actor-comedian was to be starred.

First, however, a studio suitable for modern production had to be built. This was accomplished in a few months, and the San Antonio Pictures Corporaion, of which both Leo and Theo. Wharton and Mr. Arbuckle are officers and stockholders, began shooting film.

Now Leo Wharton is back in New York with three five-reel features which should find a ready market, since New York is always hungry for good pictures and since the Whartons know how to turn out this brand.

The titles of the three features which Mr. Wharton has brought to the metropolis to be sold to the highest bidder are "Mr. Bingle," from a story by George Barr McCutcheon; "Squire Phinney," by Holman Day, and "Mr. Potter of Texas," written by A. C. Gunter.

All star Mr. Arbuckle and provide roles in which this actor appears to excellent advantage.

Contrary to the opinion that a lot of us have gained, the Arbuckle features are not Westerns. One is a romping melodramatic romance, another is a homely "middle class" heart interest tale and the third is a character study, a quiet story wound about quaint characters and interesting types.

Mr. Wharton states that San Antonio has all the advantages of California for picture making, so far as he can see, and has proven an ideal place for the location of the new "lot." He will stay in New York long enough to cut and sell his first trio of features and then will depart for Texas to take up the work that is being carried along in his absence by his assistant director, Robin H. Townley, who was connected with Wharton, Inc., during all the successful years the latter firm was in business at Ithaca, N. Y.

Mrs. Bessie Wharton, famous "mother of the screen," accompanies her spouse to New York.

Leopold D. Wharton, veteran producer, vice-president of Wharton, Inc.

Beck Scheme Rouses Interest

Flatfooted Announcement of Gibraltar Picture Plans Brings Many Inquiries

FOLLOWING the announcement of Gibraltar Pictures, Arthur F. Beck, executive of the company, has found himself the target for a mass of wires and letters from all sections of the country. By declaring a policy of an anti-trust market, Mr. Beck has quickened the pulse of thousands of exhibitors whose problem has been one of what to do next.

Speaking of the market conditions under which Gibraltar Pictures will operate, Mr. Beck makes some important observations. "The fight against Wall Street's dragoons is now at the door of the exhibitor. If they can't freeze him out of his business, they will try to burn him out, but the theatre man will not allow it, either way. He has a great weapon to hit back with—publicity. If I were an exhibitor I should like nothing better than the job of telling the people of my town a story of trust oppression, —tell it to them through my screen where I want to point the way to my fellow producers who may be open and local newspapers.

"But no exhibitors can carry on his fight of independent film. And that is minded enough to adopt a few suggestions: It is this:

"I have come out openly with a pledge of the entire Gibraltar output with five producing units on a platform of open market, selective booking. I have minced no words about it. I ask all producers who share my conviction that the market should be free to spare no type in proclaiming it to the exhibitor, so that he may know what to count upon. No one of us produces a sufficient variety of subjects to supply completely the demands of an independent market, but collectively, there is sufficient for the theatres to choose from. I therefore plead for a full and open declaration by every producer whose product is available for fight for independence."

The Government Revenue Figures

Dear Mr. Johnson:

In the November 15 issue of the NEWS you stated that the receipts of the motion picture theatres of the country are estimated to be $750,000,000, while the film producers receive only one-tenth of that sum in film rentals.

If I am not mistaken, on several occasions I have read that the total receipts by the Government from amusement taxes will be about $50,000,000—that it was not that much the first year of the tax.

The $50,000,000 are taxes received from all forms of amusements—motion pictures, vaudeville, speaking dramas, operas, amusement parks, circuses, etc.

If the amusement tax represents only 10 per cent. of the total receipts from all amusements, the sum would only be $500,000,000—but the tax represents more than 10 per cent.—for the month of October my own tax was over 14 per cent. of the total receipts—that would reduce the total receipts below $500,000,000 by a good many millions.

The question remains, what part of the total receipts are motion picture receipts and what are the receipts from other forms of amusements?

If the revenue reports based on approximately fifty millions a year are anywhere near correct it puts an entirely different face on this matter, and it cannot be said that the average total rentals are only 10 per cent. of the total receipts.

I for one do not object to percentage bookings properly adjusted on money making attractions, but your conclusions would lead producers to believe that they were the most underpaid of all industries—when the cry is going up all over the land about the present high film rentals.

If I am wrong about the approximate annual $50,000,000 Government receipts from all forms of amusements I will be glad to be corrected. Yours very truly,

J. E. STOCKER.
Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich.

EDITORIAL NOTE: At the hearing held October 7th of the general amusement interests before the House Committee on Ways and Means, the revenue to the Government from taxes on all theatres and amusements was referred to variously as from $60,000,000 to $100,000,000. Mr. Garner referred specifically to the taxes from motion picture theatres as amounting to about $65,000,000. At the same time Mr. Kitchin made it evident that the Government is not satisfied that its collections have been 100 per cent. complete.

The $65,000,000 figure is only an estimate, of course. The revenue department is unable to separate picture theatres from others in its tax totals. Furthermore, since this figure is given for 1919 it is obviously based upon the first six months of the year, and we are well aware that picture theatre attendance will prove considerably heavier during this last half of this year.

On the whole, therefore, so far as taxes are concerned our figure of $600,000,000 to $750,000,000 gross intake this year seems to be about right.

First National Flings Down Gauntlet

Long Awaited Announcement Uniting Independents for Protection Against Producer-Distributor Combines Made; All Embracing in Scope

REVOLUTIONARY changes in exhibitor booking and exchange rental methods, a standardization of rental values and a cooperative plan whereby thousands of independent theatre owners unite their interests for mutual protection against the proposed inroads into the exhibitor field by producer-distributor combinations, are a part of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit's plan of expansion, which is officially announced this week in all its detail.

The general plan of organization provides the enfranchisement of these exhibitors through the medium of the Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated, which was formed in Delaware recently with an authorized capital of 60,000 shares, and which will be the purchasing and distributing organization for the new plan.

Under the new plan there will be a separate Associated First National Pictures corporation formed for each of the twenty-three territories into which the country has been divided.

Nathan Gordon, Chairman of the Exhibitors Defense Committee and First National franchise owner for New England, and J. D. Williams, Gen. Mgr. of First National, outstanding figures in the great First National Expansion plan

Opening for Independents

In each of these territories, which, as a unit, will be assigned an established percentage cost for every negative price paid by the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., the present franchise owners in First National Exhibitors' Circuit will dispose of sub-franchises to independent exhibitors. This part of the plan brings several important changes into operation which will revolutionize the old system of booking and renting.

First—Each sub-franchise subscribed for by individual exhibitors will immediately and automatically establish the rental value the individual exhibitor will pay for each production released by the Associated First National Pictures, Inc. This will amount to a definite, permanent percentage of the valuation of each picture in the respective territories.

Second—Ownership of a franchise will guarantee an exhibitor the sole and exclusive right to Associated First National attractions in his established locality. In the larger cities this will be determined by zones, while in the smaller towns it will carry with it as a protective measure the exclusive privilege to exhibit First National attractions in the municipality.

Third—This exclusive exhibition right will make it impossible for the exchange serving the territory to book any other theatre in any zone or theatre locality where an independent exhibitor previously has obtained a franchise for Associated First National pictures.

Fourth—The exhibitors holding franchises will pay rentals for attractions equivalent to their franchise percentage of interest in the main franchise in the respective territories. In brief, if a theatre holding an Associated First National franchise is rated in that franchise as five per cent of the associated theatre strength of the territory, the rentals of that theatre will be fixed on all productions released by the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., at five per cent of the valuation of each picture in the territory as a whole.

Fifth—Franchise costs are secured to exhibitors in stock in the exchange, against which, as permanent security, is the exchange's territorial franchise and equity in all contracts which the national organization has with stars and producers, releases made and the physical assets of film on hand.

Sixth—Ownership of a franchise will protect exhibitors against price opposition and the menaces of a fast growing form of competition wherein theatres controlled and financed by producer-distributor interests are bidding up rentals at personal loss to prevent independent exhibitors from obtaining meritorious screen material.

Exhibitors Heartily Approve

Telegraphed advices from J. D. Williams, manager of First National Exhibitors' Circuit and N. H. Gordon, chairman of the Exhibitors' Defense Committee of the Circuit, who are now in the west, state that eighty per cent of the original exhibitor-members of the Circuit, who are all that so far have been approached, have signed the agreements for the new plan of operation, and that the same percentage of the corporate capital for the Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated, has been subscribed. The remaining twenty per cent of the membership will be visited by Mr. Gordon and Mr. Williams on their return trip to New York.

The capital stock of $10,400,000 for the Associated First National Theatres, Incorporated, is being subscribed by the exhibitor franchise owners, and will constitute an immediately available reserve for all of the members of the new Circuit and will be used to protect the interests and investments of the franchise owners whenever they are threatened with unfair competition from producer-distributors. It will be available for the construction of new theatres, or for the remodeling, improving and enlarging of present theatre properties wherever it is deemed essential and advisable.

The Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated, as the distributing organization will direct exchange operations and act as the purchasing body in negotiations with independent producers. Its prime function will be to contract with individual stars and producers, and supervise the mechanics of distributing the productions it buys on the open market.

The plan of expansion was first considered by the Circuit at a regular meeting of its members in New York last summer. An almost unanimous decision to proceed with it resulted in the creation of the Exhibitors' Defense Committee. The members of this special body, who were named at the meeting, are Nathan Gordon of Boston, chairman; E. B. Johnson of Turner and Dahnken, San Francisco, John Kunsky of Detroit, A. H. Blank of Des Moines, Omaha and Kansas City, Jacob Fabian of New Jersey and Tom Moore of Washington.

The committee retained three firms of attorneys, namely A. L. and S. F. Jacobs of New York, Morris Wolff of Philadelphia and Lee Friedman of Boston.

When the members had finished their weeks of continuous work J. D. Williams and Mr. Gordon were selected as the representatives of the Exhibitors' Defense Committee to personally visit every First National franchise owner for their signatures to it.

Organization Progressing

This work, according to Mr. Gordon and Mr. Williams, has virtually been completed, and the individual members are now actively organizing their respective territories in accordance with it. The first authorized statement from the membership about the development of the plan by territories came two weeks ago from Mr. Moore, in an announcement that Harry Crandall of Washington, D. C., and Charles E. Whitehurst of Baltimore, owning and controlling fifteen large theatres in those two cities alone, had joined him. Colonel Fred Levy, franchise owner for Kentucky and Tennessee, in a statement published last week, said that many important exhibitors in his territory would be affiliated with it within a week or ten days.

Reports from other members which have not yet been authorized for publication show that rapid progress is being made in all territories.

In substance the new plan is an elaboration of the co-operative methods which were responsible for the formation of First National Exhibitors' Circuit more than two years ago, according to Mr. Williams and Mr. Gordon.

"Its greatest surface recommendation," they declare, "is that it was devised and worked out by exhibitors, not by producers, distributors, or a combination of the two, or by stock manipulators and financial interests seeking an inlet into the industry. Every dollar of the money that is supporting it, every detail of its structure, and every step in its application had been contributed, studied out and determined on by theatre owners only. Two years ago we were laughed at as a misguided lot of theorists, trying to accomplish the impossible in expecting our exhibitor-members to work together. The first obstacle, and it was a difficult one then, was to convince capable stars and producers that First National could provide a market that made for independence and that the members were sincere and loyal in their determination to break down the barriers that the advocated vices of program booking had built up round their theatres.

Elaboration of the Cooperative Method

"Where is the program booking method today? Can anyone deny that it was the First National members, with their theatres veered to the support of the independents, thereby denying the program monstrosity the big first run market it needed for existence, who have rendered it extinct in a general sense?

"Where is the old 'complete service' tactic which compelled exhibitors to book six, eight or a dozen unprofitable productions to obtain one release with a real star? Can anyone deny that it was the First National members who ruled it out of existence as a weapon of consequence?

"Can anyone point to a time when exhibitors could book the productions of Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, or any big star in great demand as individual releases before the theatre owners started a co-operative movement in First National contracted for their output?

"These are but a very few of the real benefits that practical exhibitor co-operation have given to the industry and to exhibitors generally. Their citation is not a vanity or a blatant brag. They are mentioned as concrete evidence of what an exhibitor co-operative body has accomplished, and in a prophetic sense, of what this new co-operative organization can and will do in the future.

"First National members long have been alert to the positive need for maintaining the independence of small exhibitors if the industry is to thrive and progress. Wall Street's intentions, manifest through film interests, have been very obvious in the last year. Big scepulators want theatre control. It means a direct and surpassingly powerful aid to moulding public opinion, through the screen, in behalf of the giant monopolies in many lines, and it would mean, if realized, a splendid acrobatic tumbler for the world's greatest stock juggling act. Of more pertinent moment to the industry, especially to producers and exhibitors, it would mean a loss of independence, a forfeit of freedom and a machine-like business in which personal ability, talent and artistic progress would be subsidized and drowned in ticket tape.

"To preserve exhibitor independence, large and small, and to keep open the path to the future for deserving stars and producers, First National's members are extending their protective franchises to the representative exhibitors in every territory, and with it they offer the economic benefits of a collective purchasing power.

"The new plan is being supported by great numbers of exhibitors. They will be independent in every sense of the word. Their screens will be open to quality pictures from any source. They will not be bound by any conditions that will close the market doors to qualified independent producers.

Harry Schwalbe, Treasurer First National Exhibitors' Circuit

"They will be freed for all time from the costly and dangerous sales practice which capitalizes exhibitor culpability by bidding prices up with signed contracts from opposition as the club. The rental prices they pay will be determined by one factor only—the valuation of each production they obtain through their First National franchise.

"To stars and producers the affiliation of theses exhibitors means a stable, ever-present market, always seeking worth-while screen material, and offering as encouragement for it purchase prices that will have no limit excepting that set by box-office value."

Looping the Loop in the Windy City

Hyman Attractions have taken over the state rights for Michigan for a number of the big George Kleine pictures and President Hyman, who is making a booking trip through that state, reports a big demand for them. Quo Vadis is being booked as a road show. Among the other pictures Mr. Hyman is now booking in Michigan are: "Children of Eve," "Magic Skin," "Courage of the Common Place," "Dubarry" and "Naked Truth." "Penny Philanthropist," the world rights of which are owned by the Hyman corporation, also is being booked in Michigan, and many reservations are already reported.

Moline, Illinois, soon is to have a new $100,000 movie theatre. George R. Stephenson, manager of the Watch Tower, Rock Island, heads the syndicate which has purchased a site in Moline and will proceed with the erection of the theatre at once. The big new house will follow the plans of the Columbia at Davenport.

Ellis Bostick, of the Merrill, Milwaukee, was in Chicago last week in the interest of "The Isle of Conquest."

One of the first and best gifts Santa Claus has in pack for the wounded Yanks at Fort Sheridan, Ill., or rather the first installment of it, has arrived ahead of time, and the soldier boys are happy. President R. C. Cropper, of the Beehive Film Exchange Company, has presented William S. Otis, field director of the Red Cross at Fort Sheridan, with two moving picture shows a week for a year, absolutely free of cost, the first of which included three reels—Neal Hart in "Out of the West," Billy West in "Ship Ahoy" and Arbuckle in "Fatty the Mermaid." The programs will be made up from the current releases of the Beehive Film Exchange.

Chicago returned to normal December 15, after more than a week of coal restrictions which had made living and business conditions chaotic. Even the so-called non-essentials now may run non-restricted by any fuel saving edicts. The first coal mined since the ending of the strike rolled into the city during the day and by nightfall 10,000 tons of this new coal was being unloaded.

The New Clark theatre, at Clark street and Wilson avenue, Chicago, opened December 14th under the management of Frank Forsythe, formerly manager of the Shakespeare. The feature for the premier showing was Mrs. Sidney Drews' adaptation of Edna Ferber's "The Gay Old Dog." Three vaudeville acts were also on the program.

William A. Vogel at present is making his headquarters in Chicago, while pushing his court fight to recover his share of his mother's and father's estate, which is being claimed by his uncles and which is said to run into six figures. Mr. Vogel is well known as a designer and decorater of settings, having done work in California for Triangle, Ince and Constance Talmadge. His many friends are hoping to see him win the bag of gold.

The Ebony Film Corporation, through arrangements with the author and director, Jack McCullough, are presenting a new screen production, "Do the Dead Talk." The production of the picture has been under way for three months and is scheduled for release early in the new year. Willard Bert, Grand Forham and Herminia France, a foreign actress of some note, make their first screen appearance in this picture, which will be put out on a territorial rights basis.

Foreign Opposition Looms Up Ahead

Edward Godal in Exclusive Interview Tells of Large English Capital Available, and Unity of Effort That May Make Superior Product

AN unprejudiced analysis of the motion picture industry in England, of which he is well qualified to speak, and of the industry in America as he sees it, was given last week by Edward Godal, Managing Director of the British and Colonial Kinematograph Co., Ltd., of London, in an interview with a NEWS representative. Mr. Godal is in this country making a survey of conditions and signing up some technical men, directors and stars for his laboratories and studios.

Mr. Godal has full confidence that the English producers are aiming in the direction of superior pictures and that the industry will make a quick recovery from the depression wrought by conditions through the war. His opinions are interesting and backed as they are by long experience and association with the picture industry abroad, take on an added importance.

In the course of his talk Mr. Godal said:

Trade Slowly Recovering

"The past and present history of the Motion Picture Industry in America is the open book from which England can read its road to progress of the future. This industry works in cycles and as America has in the past learned much from France so will England be compelled, if it is to compete for world position, to learn from the experience of both these countries.

"Let us see however if the conditions at present obtaining in England are such as to enable it to take full advantage of the unique opportunities before it. As the managing director of one of the largest, oldest and most progressive companies in the United Kingdom and as one who was responsible for the importation of American directors, stars and staff to London nearly a year ago, readers will I hope take the facts and the opinions inferred from them to be true and unprejudiced.

"The trade in England is now slowly recovering from the crippling effect of the world war. My experience in this country has convinced me that those who have not been in Europe since 1914 cannot appreciate how stultifying was the war upon our industries, especially those non-essential to the war's progress. This was most marked in the film industry as we had to contend against lack of fuel, light, food, shipping, machinery and labor. It is not surprising therefore that film production was practically at a standstill.

"Building being also prohibited, the existing theatres of which there are only about 3,600 in Great Britain had to cater for the war workers hungering for amusement, and these were over crowded. The films for exhibition had to come therefore from the country which was least touched by the wars ravages and consequently about 90 per cent of the films shown were American productions. Indeed the uncertainty of the war's duration and the constant need for new subjects caused such a demand for these that they were booked en bloc, generally unseen for a period of from six to twelve months ahead.

Edward Godal

"After the armistice and on the resumption of English producing and distributing activities, this block booking system became one of our greatest evils and the effect of it is evidenced now by the fact that British Productions cannot get a release before from eight to twelve months after production date.

"The disastrous effect of this situation is evident for not only are productions out of date in theme and fashion on release but the locking up of capital for this period is a menace to the trade.

"The demand for British made films, on the other hand is so great

SPEAKING IN BILLIONS

THE Wall Street Journal, in a recent article headed, "Wall Street Taking on Amusement," presents, among others, the following interesting figures, indicating the great scope of the industry, and the solid financial basis on which it rests:

Gross revenue of picture theatres of the conutry in one year—$800,000,000. This is $100,000,000 more than the combined gross of thirteen leading rubber companies

The 15,000 picture theatres seat 8,000,000 people

Nearly every town of 1,000 population has at least one theatre.

Twelve hundred new theatres are being built at a cost of $72,000,000.

It costs $300 a seat to build a good theatre these days.

At the conservative figure of $100 per seat as the present value of the theatres, it is found the investment in motion picture houses totals about $800,000,000.

All other countries of the world have 17,500 theatres—but 2,500 more than the number in the United States.

Consumption of positive films averages 10,000,000 feet a week, as against 3,000,000 in 1913.

Admission prices run up to $2 per seat. The five-cent house is a dim memory.

Seventy thousand dollars rolled into the box office of the new Capitol theatre, New York, its first week.

American film producers have a combined income of $90,000,000.

Famous Players handles $500,000 of domestic business a week and $100,000 of foreign—turning its money over two and one-half times a year.

Big Money Lassoing Industry

Jones, Linick and Shaffer Man Draws Deductions from Interesting Data

THE following article is from the pen of Ralph Thomas Kettering, general representative of the Jones, Linick & Shaffer Amusement Enterprises:

With the appearance of J. Pierpont Morgan and the Dupont Powder interests, over the horizon of the amuse- of this vast industry as a legitimate child. It has been a long time coming, but at last the entrance of the great money kings places the business of entertainment in the front rank of all industries. More than ten years ago, I preached the fact that eventually this great occupation would come into its heritage. More years than that ago, I called to the attention of the world the fact that more money was invested in lease-holds and property in the amusement business than in the combined interests of Standard Oil and Bethelem Steel. The money kings have recognized the business of entertainment from all angles.

Behind the string of Marcus Loew vaudeville theatres hovers the shadow of the Liberty National Bank of New York and the Bankers Trust Company. Dupont Powder seems to have leaned toward motion pictures for it is plainly felt in the expansion of the Goldwyn Company. Morgan, while admittedly in back of Loew, is said to furnish a great portion of the coin with which Adolph Zukor and his companions in Paramount pictures are grabbing theatres everywhere. The split of Klaw & Erlanger has also brought vast sums of money from Wall Street to the sides of both partners individually.

It is said that Wall Street money is being diverted to the interests of A. H. Woods and the Shuberts. It is also known that Woods and the Shuberts are also amalgamating with Samuel Goldwyn's galloping snap-shots.

Could it be possible that it is one big money clique lassoing the whole theatrical industry

Looks like it. Who can tell

At any rate it points to a new era for amusements, and 1920 will be the biggest year from the standpoint of entertainment that America and the whole world has ever seen.

Dramas Based on Our History Wanted

A statement from the National Board of Review decries the lack of film dramas based on American history, and calls to the leading producers to turn their efforts in the direction of filling the demand, which, it says, is heavy throughout the country. The Board believes interest on the part of the American people in its history is strong and that the prevalent producer fear of a "costume story" need not obtain in such cases.

Mother of Clara K. Young Dies

Word has been received from the offices of the Garson Studios, Inc., that Mrs. Edward M. Kimball, mother of Clara Kimball Young, died Friday, December 12, 1919. Particulars of the mother's demise, other than her sudden death was due to heart failure, have not yet been received at the Equity offices.

Mrs. Kimball, formerly Pauline Maddern, was a well known figure in stock and repertoire companies of earlier days.

and the prices obtainable are so high, that the public, exhibitors and distributors are all dissatisfied. This is no good augury for the future bookings of American subjects in England. This state of affairs also exists to a somewhat less marked extent in other parts of Europe and these circumstances added to by the difficulties of rate of exchange must have a reactive effect on this country as will be noticed in the near future when the export business of America will diminish to a dangerous degree.

"It will be contended by the American trade that this reaction will be only temporary as the European public will become tired of inferior pictures and that the building of new theatres will ease the situation. Although our pictures in the past have been inferior, due to the smaller market, we have had to cater for and the consequent smaller receipts obtainable, let me however remind them of the great wave of progress in the moving picture enterprise now sweeping over England. The romance and magnitude of the industry in this country has had an alluring effect on English capital and with the entry of responsible Englishmen into the business, large capital is available for those who have the right perspective and the experience.

"Further, Europe is a new and happy hunting ground for the producer of the future. New and unexploited settings, the beauty spots of Europe full of history and romance with their native inhabitants and atmosphere, the foliage from arctic to tropical to be encountered in a comparatively short journey, the brilliance of the French and Italians in the manufacture and manipulation of the cinematograph machinery and in the art of production (evidenced so conspicuously by their successes in this country), and the soundness of English manufacture. the beauty and solidity of its old buildings and furniture together with the geographical position of London as the center of the world must inevitably make Europe an important factor in future productions and London an important centre of the industry.

"This has been appreciated by several American producing organizations who have already planned producing activities in Europe. Looked at from a broad point of view the enlargement of the scope of picture production by men who have gained such experience as the Americans have, can only make for improvement in the products, owing to the competiton that it will engender.

"It is here however where there are dangers, which if not appreciated can well wreck the brilliant future of this industry.

"The history in the past should help to point out its future in Europe and those having ambitions to extend to England and the Continent should remember that just as each country has its own history, language and temperament, so it has its own psychology and it is through its psychology that it can be approached.

"Film production if internationalized can only be done satisfactorily by allowing each country the full use of its facilities. American expert technical knowledge gained by past experience will need to mingle with the other equally essential qualifications possessed by the British, French and Italians and to get the best from these nations, they should be attacked psychologically, rather by 'peaceful penetration' and co-operation, then by the publicity bombardment which has been so conspicuous from quarters and must have undoubtedly been expensive in time, money and prestige. The Englishman knows more of his own country's conditions than does the foreigner, similarly with the Frenchman and Italian; therefore co-operate, internationalize, reciprocate, and benefit by the experience of the past by not spoiling the conditions in these new fields and thereby causing some of the evils so evident in the industry of this country. It is, in my opinion, only by internationalization and reciprocity that America will avoid the reaction which usually follows every extreme period, either of success or failure. Europe needs America for its experience and the American market for its exploitation if its products are to be of equal standard to the Americans. America needs Europe for

Griffith Narrowly Escapes

Slurs of "Fake" Indignantly Denied; Director and Company Were Near Death

THE deep worry which shadowed the offices of D. W. Griffith, when for three days last week it was feared he and his company of players were lost at sea after leaving Miami, Florida, for the Bahamas, has been succeeded by a wave of indignation at stories whispered around to the effect the entire affair was what is known to the trade as a "press plant." It is stated—and this statement is strongly upheld by other information which has reached the trade press—that the affair was in reality, as pictured in the newspapers, a narrow escape from a tragedy which would have deeply shocked the trade. Where the story of "fake" has originated from—the Doubting Thomas who has made it his business to spread it—is not known, but it is believed real.

The following statement from A. L. Grey, General Manager for D. W. Griffith explains itself:

"It is beyond belief—beyond thought—that even the most bitter enemy of Mr. Griffith could doubt the truth of the report relative to the disaster through which he and his company passed. It was a very serious fight with death, and but for the hand of Providence, one that might have had a most tragic end. That anyone associated with Mr. Griffith could have conceived so diabolical a 'press agent story' is unthinkable, unspeakable."

A further statement from R. E. Long, General Press representative, reads:

"I hope our office never again has to go through the terrible experiences of last Saturday and Sunday, when, throughout the day and night, our fears were for the worst, and I hope, too, that those who have had so little courtesy as to question for a moment the truth of the situation, never will have to suffer as we suffered.

"Will you help us to assure the friends of Mr. Griffith, and the entire industry, that not one statement issued from this office was other than the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?"

AMONG the many interesting things in this Holiday Number there is one that we are willing to call to your attention ourselves. That is the four-page Educational insert. The first insert to be used by this corporation. And the first sign of the big things that may be expected from the Hammons aggregation during the coming year.

We are also willing to call attention to the fact that "sales copy" in addition to beauty can be put into an insert. That map idea of the Educational insert strikes home with us.

Bre'er Hammons is at present on the high seas combining a honeymoon with business. The boat will barely dock on the other side when he will turn around and start back. Conferences with the Educational foreign organization will he held between sailings.

It's a cheerful thought as we bang this out in a zero atmosphere to have one of Eddie Small's thermometers alongside the Underwood. The first of the Christmas rush surely was more than appropriate. And when not in use as a thermometer it can serve—in appearance at least—as a speedometer. This trusty Underwood sadly needs the inspiration of a speedometer.

APPROACHING slowly to the last line of this last column we'd be tickled to death if we could think of something new and something clever to say in the way of holiday greetings.

But shucks, boys, you know the way we feel about it. If there is anything of good cheer we can wish you—including a reversal of the Supreme Court's dictum—we sure do wish it. And then some. It's because the whole gang of you are such "regular fellers" that this job is such fun. So, from the heart out, boys—Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year!

And believe us when we say that the whole blamed NEWS staff is here to serve you twice as well during the coming year as in the past. We'll never say "Can't" unless they wring it from us; and we practice saying "Yes" by the hour.

STATE RIGHTS

THINGS look bright for the independent market this year—there's lots of money and the market is wide open for product of merit.

Just an indication of the activity in the state rights field can be secured from our department "The Independent," starting on Page ——— of this issue.

Watch this Motion Picture News department during the coming year. Next week we will again run the "Independent Field Ticker" that popular record of state rights sales, and from week to week you'll find new ideas and all the news in breezy fashion.

M. P. D. A. Notes

"There will be a vacant chair" when Frederick A. Thomson soon forsakes the M. P. D. A. and Players' Club for directorial duties on the Pacific coast, to which he has been assigned. However, the quarters of the coast lodge are said to be well supplied with accommodations for New York members who are "A long, long way from home."

Players under the direction of Perry Vekroff, who is making the screenplay "Cynthia of the Minute" for the Artco combination, have been "Floating down the River" the past week for scenes aboard ship. What more could Hudson's discovery ask? Leah Baird is "Cynthia" and Hugh Thompson, her handsome leading man, is a typical Louis Joseph Vance hero. Mr. Vekroff claims even Hendrik Hudson himself could but appreciate this distinction.

Directors Charles A. Miller and William F. Haddock will be among those absent from M. P. D. A. activities for the next two weeks, since both these gentlemen are engaged in the supervision and directing of an educational film, scenes of which are to be made in and nearby Port Henry. After an enjoyable meeting it would be a long drive back.

Among those "welcome home" for the holiday festivities of the Los Angeles lodge M. P. D. A. will be Director Wally Van, who with Benny Leonard and company engaged in making a fifteen episode serial under Mr. Van's supervision, will leave for Culver City on December 15th.

Foreign Opposition

product on purposes and for its export trade. It will need Europe all the more in the future, when theatres will spring up in chains which will exhibit European-made films of excellent quality. The American market will not always represent 75 per cent of the world's market.

"The after-war craving for amusement and the influx of outside capital to the motion picture industry will be responsible for a sudden growth of chains of theatres in Great Britain and the Continent. The first moves in this direction are already evident, and it is up to the American trade, shortly, to decide whether they will co-operate and reciprocate by being connected with and encouraging foreign productions for exploitation through their exchanges in America and throughout the world, thereby enabling such pictures to be of higher grade than in the past, owing to their greater remunerative value and consequently allowing of greater cost, or to continue the policy of endeavoring to press purely American pictures on all nations by force of a bombardment of cash and publicity.

"The former policy will undoubtedly be the successful one and will enable the American industry to reap the benefit of its past experience and lead to greater development in the future, by illustrating to England and the Continent that it's one desire is to produce and exploit the best irrespective of nationality and that the word 'prejudice' is not known in its dictionary.

"Personally I believe this to be the case, as subjects produced by us in England and the Continent have been sold and are being sought after here—perhaps because I have attacked the situation in the past by a previous study of the psychology and conditions of the people I have catered for—but unfortunately my opinions are not shared by others in England.

"It is because of this and because of my firm conviction that it is the methods adopted and not the objectives that are the causes of any misunderstandings that do exist that I ardently suggest RECIPROCITY via CO-OPERATION and a study of PSYCHOLOGY."

ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN
in
"The COUNTRY COUSIN"
You'd never think that Nancy from Meadowbrook would cause such commotion amid the blasé smart set of Eastern society
Her eyes and her ways (you know—what we mean) were irresistible to the monocled Johnnies who bragged about their pull with the ladies
But Nancy from Meadowbrook suddenly became citified looked 'em over critically and then some thing happened

The California theatre of San Francisco specializes in hand drawn displays. This one on "The Country Cousin" is up to the usual standard

Current Week's Bills Throughout Country

In reducing to our columns this display on "The Beauty Market" loses much of its beauty. It was printed in three colors in the Indianapolis Sun of Dec. 14th, and is typical of the sort of work S. Barrett McCormick does each week

Motion Picture News First Annual Newspaper and Theater Directory

Following investigation and statistical work covering a period of a year, MOTION PICTURE NEWS is able to present herewith the first newspaper and theatre census of the principal cities of the United States and Canada. The facts as given below are compiled from a questionnaire sent to all newspapers in cities of over twelve thousand population. The questionnaire was backed by repeated follow-ups, with the understanding that any paper failing to reply was in a measure "not interested in motion pictures."

The directory as presented herewith is the latest step in our constant effort to increase cooperation between the motion picture industry and the daily newspaper. Its value to producers, distributors and others placing advertising and publicity through newspapers is evident; likewise, its presence in the offices of the newspapers listed will be of year-round service, both through making available a knowledge of what other papers are doing regarding motion pictures, and through the presence of the producers' annual announcements in these pages.

The name of the newspaper appears first in the table, then the time of publication, the circulation, the name of the photoplay editor, and the amusement advertising rate. The quoted matter following is a resume of the answers to various questions. Where the managing editor or some other executive is listed in the place given to the photoplay editor's name it is an indication that the person so listed is the one attending to photoplay news.

Live Producers News

Two Goldwyn Offerings Draw in New York

New York motion picture patrons had their first opportunity to see two of the finest of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's new productions this week, when Mabel Normand in "Jinx" was the feature attraction at the Capitol theatre and Tom Moore was presented in "Toby's Bow" at both the New York and the Brooklyn Strand. At all three of the houses the pictures drew large audiences. Box office reports covering the early days of the week indicate that business increased steadily throughout the engagements, which is the surest test of the appeal of a production.

Although "Jinx" has been given pre-release showings at a number of the most important theatres in cities of the south and west, it was withheld in New York at the request of the Capitol management until a date could be arranged for its presentation.

Capital Coast Studio Is Enlarged

Recent developments growing out of the big demand for short productions have made the Capital Film Company's studio one of the most rapidly growing production plants on the West Coast, where Al Jennings, Neal Hart, and Helen Gibson each are heading short feature production units, and where still a fourth company soon will be at work making comedies.

The expansion of the studio has followed the visit there of S. L. Barnhard, president of the company, who has returned to Chicago and expects to announce some new Capital plans soon.

New Rothacker Plants for 1920

New York and Los Angeles Will be Sites; Great Expansion

THINGS are going to move in the motion picture world during 1920, according to Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, of Chicago.

"It would be a waste of printer's ink to say that the next year will be the biggest in film history", opined Mr. Rothacker. "Long about Christmas time every year for the last umpsteen years predictions were made that the coming twelve months would be the most prosperous the industry had known. Each one of these cheerful predictions came true, because each year since the dawn of the projector's light has been bigger than the year preceding.

"Of course, the good old-fashioned prediction would hold good now—the prediction that the coming year will be the most prosperous exhibitors, distributors and producers have known. But I prefer to say that things are going to move in moving pictures next year.

"I believe that before the coming calendar has outlived its usefulness the decisive battle between Wall Street and the exhibitors will have been fought. Many of us believe we know how the 1920 war for independence will come out. And besides this I look for great strides in the development of the technical side of the industry. Yes, it looks as though 1920 will mark the beginning of a new epoch in screen history."

The plans of the Rothacker Company for the coming year call for the doubling of the capacity of the Chicago studio-laboratory and service station, the erection of similar plants in Los Angeles and New York, and as early as possible in 1920 the launching of plans for a studio-laboratory and service station in London and a service station in Paris.

This expansion has been made imperative by the Rothacker growth, particularly in laboratory work for large producers and exhibitors and in the Rothacker company's production of industrial and advertising motion pictures.

With laboratories in the other producing centers, the Rothacker company will be able to assume responsibility for guaranteed quality work from the time the negative is exposed right on through to the packing for distribution all over the world. As it is now producers in Los Angeles, New York and London develop their own negatives and the Rothacker quality work begins only when the negatives are received at the Chicago plant for multiplication into prints. Often the best printing and tinting results are made impossible by careless handling of the negative during or shortly after development.

Watterson R. Rothacker

President Rothacker will go to Los Angeles the first of the year to be at the cornerstone laying of the coast plant. When the laboratory is ready for business, a motor collection and delivery service will be installed. Trucks will make the rounds of producing studios in the evening, gathering up the film that has been exposed in the cameras during the day. That night the negatives will be developed in the Rothacker laboratory and next morning the trucks will deliver prints from those negatives to the producers. J. Wesley Smith, for years special Rothacker representative in the coast studios, will remain in that capacity.

With laboratories at strategical points President Rothacker can cut down the distribution costs of clients.

President Rothacker is ready to open sales-service offices of his industrial and advertising pictures departments in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Buffalo and St. Louis; and as soon as possible in 1920 wil extend the offices to other important cities in the Middle West.

Preparations are being made for two new Rothacker releases in 1920. One will be entitled "Rothacker Industrial-log", which will be a single reel feature made to bring out the romance of American industry. The other release, "The Rothacker Review", will be composed of chapters on education, health, science, beauty, fashions, nature and human interest.

"In order to make things move in our corner of the motion picture world during 1920," said President Rothacker, "we are planning an extensive advertising campaign in motion picture trade papers in the interests of producers who have prints made by us. We will also advertise in a big way in business magazines such as System, Printers' Ink, etc."

Hank Mann Completes "The Knock-Out"

Hank Mann's third two-reel comedy, "The Knock-Out," has just been completed for Arrow at the company's studio in Hollywood; and according to Morris R. Schlank, the comedian's producer, it proves worthy of its title.

Hank is introduced as a paper-hanger's assistant in a girls' gymnasium. Fascinated by the fair ones in their gym suits he cleverly arranges to act as their instructor and puts them through a few gymnastic lessons originated by himself.

The picture is said to be very entertaining, and the laughs have been scattered generously throughout. Herman C. Raymaker directed, and the support includes Vernon Dent, Madge Kirby, Jack Richards and Jess Weldon.

Will Direct Production of His Own Stories

Charles A. Logue has gone in for directing the film productions of his own stories. He will put on his latest work, an untitled drama, based on the theme that clothes make civilization, for A. H. Fischer Features, Inc. In his venture he will have the co-operation of an associate director in the person of Jack Kennedy.

Mr. Logue and Mr. Kennedy, accompanied by P. J. Carey, the Fischer technical director, left this week for Miami, Fla., to arrange for the filming of exteriors there. They will be followed next week by the cast of players.

Players Go South for Race Track Scenes

Alice Joyce, accompanied by her director, George Terwilliger and his assistant; two camera men and their assistants, and a number of her supporting company, left for New Orleans last week to make the race track scenes for "The Sporting Duchess," the Drury Lane melodrama which will be Miss Joyce's next special Vitagraph production. The party numbers twenty-four and among the players who went South are Percy Marmont, G. V. Seyffertitz, Edith Campbell Walker, William Turner, May McAvoy, C. T. Elmer, and little Dan Comfort.

Pathe Lines Up Comics for 1920

A New Series Based on McManus Cartoons Added to List

DURING the coming year, Pathe will present one of the strongest line-up of comedy productions ever assembled by any one motion picture organization, according to a Pathe report just received.

With the signing of a contract between the International Film Service Company, Inc, and Pathe Exchange Inc. whereby the latter will distribute a series of two reel subjects based on George McManus's famous cartoons, "Bringing Up Father," Pathe it is said, will be in a position to release three two-reel comedy subjects monthly. The "Bringing Up Father" fun-makers will be produced for International by the Christie Film Co., Inc., of California, from the McManus comics which for years have appeared in the leading newspapers of the United States.

Harold Lloyd's new series of $100,000 comedies are to be released every four weeks, and Mrs. Sidney Drew's series of "After Thirty" stories starring John Cumberland, are to be issued one a month. The Rolin Film Company will continue producing one reel comedies for release each week. Harry "Snub" Pollard is featured in this series, along with the dusky child-comedian, "Sunshine Sammy."

Production of both the "Bringing Up Father" and the Mrs. Drew series are now under way. The Christie Company is producing the screen version of the McManus cartoons in California while Mrs. Drew is working in New York. John Cumberland seeks new fields to conquer in the Mrs. Drew comedies. He has already appeared in several comedies produced by Mrs. Drew and more than upheld his reputation, which was further enhanced by his delightfully human performance in "The Gay Old Dog."

Harold Lloyd has resumed work on his two-reelers in the Rolin studio in Los Angeles. Pathe reports at some length on the thorough exploitation that Lloyd's new series of $1,000,000 comedies are receiving. Several exhibitors who have hitherto devoted only a small share of their advertising to comedies are now apportioning to the new Lloyds an amount of space equivalent to that assigned to their other features. Among those who have accorded the two-reelers extensive advertising are named Jack Eaton of the Strand, New York, Marcus Loew, and James Q. Clemmer of Seattle.

While tributes in behalf of the first of Lloyd's multiple-reel subjects, "Bumping into Broadway" and "Captain Kidd's Kids," continue to arrive from prominent exhibitors, Harold Lloyd is reported to be actively engaged on the third of his series, entitled "From Hand to Mouth," at the Rolin studio in Los Angeles. Pathe announces that this will be released on December 28.

Mildred Davis, Lloyd's new leading woman, makes her debut in two-reel productions in "From Hand to Mouth" In this new picture, Lloyd is said to go from a touch of pathos to a roaring comedy situation, with the dominant personality of the bespectacled comedian always forcibly appealing. Snub Pollard assists Lloyd in the mirth making, and his task, is reported to be well done as usual.

Goldwyn Buys Widely Read Tales

"Black Pawl" and "Wild Apples" for Pickford are Purchases

TWO more stories that promise to provide good photoplay material have been purchased by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and will be produced either at the Culver City Studios, or in the East where the production force is now in operation under the direction of Robert B. McIntyre. "Black Pawl," by Ben Ames Williams and "Wild Apples," an anonymous novel by the author of "The Straight Road," are the latest works secured by Goldwyn. "Wild Apples" will be used as a starring vehicle for Jack Pickford. It is also announced that this company is negotiating for the rights to a number of other stories of equal importance.

Ben Ames Williams is becoming a frequent contributor to the Goldwyn program. His "Jubilo," it is claimed, is proving to be a successful starring vehicle for Will Rogers, and "The Great Accident," published in the Saturday Evening Post and in book form, is among the forthcoming Goldwyn productions. "Black Pawl," started as a serial in the November number of the Red Book magazine, is said to be the most dramatic narrative that Mr. Williams has written.

Because of the exceptional nature of the story, introducing "Black Pawl," the captain of a whaling ship in the South Seas, as the central figure, the picture will be produced as a big special, in which all of the possibilities for lavish effects and unusual settings are utilized. Some of the most dramatic scenes in the early sequences concern the fight between Black Pawl and Red Pawl, his son, when the ship stops at an island in the South Seas and is boarded by a missionary and his ward, Ruth, who is insulted by Red Pawl. From this point on, the story swings into a series of startling incidents based on a plot in which the element of mystery is sustained.

"Wild Apples," the vehicle secured for Jack Pickford, who has completed the production of "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," created comment in the literary world when it was published anonymously. The character to be portrayed by Pickford is that of a badly spoiled young millionaire, whose sweetheart, a working girl, is snubbed by the boy's family. Tragic consequences of the romance cause a break between the youth and his father, and the girl refuses to marry her lover for fear of ruining his career.

UNIVERSAL FILMS RETITLED

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of change in titles of a number of Universal subjects:

"The Great Air Robbery" supplants the title of "Cassidy of the Air Lanes" on the air feature story starring Lieut. Locklear.

Elmo Lincoln's "The Beach Combers" has been changed to "Captain Courages." The Art Accord serial formerly called "The Man-Hunters" has been changed to the title "The Moon-Riders."

"The Three Godfathers," a Harry Carey production will be known as "Marked Men." Elmo Lincoln's new serial "Elmo the Fearless" supplants the title of "Fighting Through."

James J. Corbett's new feature, tentatively titled is now definitely given the name "The Dazzling Rogue" while the same player's "Pals" will be known as "Kentucky Jim."

The Dorothy Phillips production directed by Allen Holubar, which was entitled "Ambition" has been changed and given the title, "The Courageous Canary."

The next Stroheim Jewel production which has been known as "The Woman in the Plot" has been given a new title of "The Devil's Pass Key."

The Marie Walcamp serial which is being made in Japan, called "The Petals of Lao Tze," it has been decided to release this chaptered romance as "The Dragon's Net."

Constance Binney Comes Up to Expectations

According to a report from Realart, "Erstwhile Susan," starring Constance Binney, is meeting with wide approval on the part of exhibitors who are showing the picture. William Sievers of St. Louis, who is the proprietor of the New Grand Central theatre, declares in a recent telegram to Realart that "Miss Binney is destined to become one of the leading and most popular stars of the screen." Mr. J. A. Dundas, owner of the Strand theatre at Sioux Falls, also sends a testimonial of praise for the picture and the star.

New Male Lead Engaged for Norma Talmadge

Edmond Lowe, who plays the part of the Chinese Prince, Tom Lee, opposite Lenore Ulric, in David Belasco's production, "The Son-Daughter," at the Belasco theatre, has just been engaged as Norma Talmadge's leading man for "The Woman Gives," her second First National picture, on which work was started last Wednesday. Roy Neil is directing this film.

A group of Robertson-Cole luminaries, declared good enough to put on any exhibitor's Christmas tree. At the top are Sessue Hayakawa, Bessie Barriscale and Martin Johnson. In the center are Mae Marsh and Za Su Pitts. Below are Henry B. Warner, Edith Storey and Lew Cody

At left and in the center are two amusing moments from "The Lord Loves the Irish" in which J. Warren Kerrigan is starred. At right is a love scene between Mr. Kerrigan and Lillian Walker in "The Joyous Liar." Both features are being distributed by W. W. Hodkinson

Neilan's Sales Plans Announced

Single Picture Booking Policy Followed; Exhibitors Anxious

MARSHALL NEILAN'S representative in charge of sales, J. R. Grainger, last week stated that the many inquiries received daily at the New York offices from exhibitors regarding the forthcoming independent Neilan product, offer an indication of a great demand which is evident for these pictures in all parts of the country. He also stated that for over a month contracts have been received daily for thousands of dollars worth of business before any information on the initial production had been issued.

In speaking of the sales plans for the Neilan product, Mr. Grainger said: "Marshall Neilan Productions will be sold via the First National Exhibitors' Circuit separately by themselves. Each picture will be treated as a separate institution both from a sales and an exploitation angle.

"We have suggested to exhibitors that they wait until the initial Neilan picture is finished, before they sign for it. This is the only fair way to sell a photoplay. We shall be most happy to allow the exhibitor to see our product before he books it. When he does book it, he will do so without any strings being attached to him.

"At the same time, contracts are being received daily for bookings on our initial offering. This is a clear indication of the confidence the exhibitor has in the merit of the Neilan product. It is readily evident to the exhibitor that Mr. Neilan's accomplishments in the past, when he worked under the common handicaps of most directors, cannot help but appear insignificant compared to what he will be able to achieve in the future, now that he is able to put on his films as he thinks they should be staged.

"Through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, the exhibitor can either book the Neilan pictures in advance or wait until he has seen them. He cannot sign for more than one however, under a blanket arrangement. Pictures cannot be sold like other merchandise. We could sell four or eight Marshall Neilan Productions under one contract at a stipulated price. However, that is a system that was found wanting long ago as it is fair neither to the exhibitor nor the producer. We will sell each picture by itself and for what it is worth, for we realize as well as the exhibitor, that it is impossible to commercialize the sale of films at a set price because it is impossible to present in each consecutive film a given standard of merit. One film might be considered fair in a certain community and in another, it might be considered wonderful. When the next picture comes along it might be just the opposite. Hence, each picture by itself and locality, is our plan.

"Our initial offering is now rapidly nearing completion and should be ready for release within the next four weeks. As soon as the time is right, we will start an intensive sales and exploitation campaign, details for which have already been completed. We will rely chiefly upon the trade papers to carry our messages to the exhibitor and with the co-operation of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, expect to offer the exhibitor an exploitation service on our product that is a distinct departure in this field.

Much Effort Expended on Foundation Offering

A well-balanced cast, selected to portray to the best advantage the various characters of the author, rather than the selection of a story to fit the particular talents of an individual star, was the original intention of the producers of "The Blindness of Youth," according to an announcement today by Mr. Murray W. Garsson, general manager of the Foundation Film Corporation, who is completing arrangements for distribution of the picture through Independent Exchanges.

"Unusual efforts were made," Mr. Garsson says, "to secure the best talent obtainable to portray the unusual and difficult parts of the play and the ultimate success of the production will tell whether the selections were wisely made.

Gertrude Shelbourne, Robert Ainsworth, Roy Langdon, and Edwin Brackett are cast in important roles.

"Old Kentucky" Only on a Percentage Basis

The following telegram has been received from Louis B. Mayer in Los Angeles by his New York organization:

"Positively accept no contracts on 'In Old Kentucky' except on percentage basis. Disregard all offers of rental, even though they be the highest on record. Notify exhibitors my confidence in the production is absolute and I desire to share both in the gamble and in the rewards."

This wire was in response to one sent to Mr. Mayer stating that leading exhibitors the country over had offered record rental prices for the Anita Stewart special.

Country to View Animal Serial

Warner on Tour in Interests of Selig's "The Lost City"

ALBERT WARNER, one of the Warner Brothers, who have the American and Canadian distribution rights of Selig's big wild animal serial, "The Lost City," will start this week on an extensive trip throughout the country, visiting the larger cities where he will arrange trade showings for the State-Right buyers, and also invite the exhibitors of the first-run theatres to see the first three episodes which he will have with him.

The itinerary of the trip calls for stops of three and four days in the following towns,—Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Des Moines, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Dallas.

The trip is being made by request of the State-Right buyers throughout the country who are interested in the serial, but cannot make the trip to New York to view the picture. Not only are the State-Right buyers interested, but the first-run theatres throughout the country have been sending wires and letters inquiring about the serial.

Mr. Warner states that those who have been under the impression that serials are low-brow entertainment will change their views when they see "The Lost City."

During the trip, Mr. Warner will make arrangements for a newspaper and billboard campaign that will reach from coast to coast. It will also afford Mr. Warner the opportunity to get the views and ideas of exhibitors to exploit the serial on a big scale. A co-operative plan of exploitation between the Warner Brothers and the exhibitors will be arranged.

The plunging spirit of the Warner Brothers can, it is said, readily be seen in the episodes already completed, and whether such an outlay of money can be proven a wise expenditure remains to be seen. It is known, however, that the outlay on the first three episodes alone has exceeded the usual cost of an entire serial, yet the cost is shown so unmistakably upon the screen that it can hardly help but influence the marketing of the production.

Juanita Hansen, already a big favorite with the screen fans, plays the leading role of Zoolah, the lost Princess.

Miss Hansen is supported by George Chesebro and a company of players who have taken every chance that promised to add to the realism and sensation of the production.

Lions, tigers, leopards, elephants, alligators, water buffaloes, chimpanzees, zebras, giraffes, an enormous gorilla, eagles, peacocks, ostriches and kangaroos, are all used in this story, giving it many thrills.

The title of the Charles Ray picture which has been referred to up-to-date as "Watch out, William," has been changed to "A Village Sleuth."

Metro Casting Director

Horace Williams, who was casting director at the Metro studios in Hollywood for a year and a half prior to the regime of Maxwell Karger, Director General, has returned to the studios in his old capacity. David Thompson, production manager, re-engaged Mr. William to take care of the increasing responsibilities of the casting department. For the past ten months Mr. Williams has been affiliated with the service bureau of the Motion Picture Producers' Association.

Pathe Prepared for Great Year

ON the threshold of the new year, Pathe is prepared for the tremendous motion picture activities forecast for 1920, with one of the strongest arrays of motion picture stars, directors, and producers in its entire annals. Mr. Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in a statement issued this week outlines the schedule which will mark the early stages of the feature campaign for the new year.

Represented in the list of feature producers will be Edgar Lewis, who makes his Pathe debut with a picturization of Andrew Soutar's famous novel, "Other Men's Shoes." Other directors and producers whose works will appear among the Pathe releases the first part of the new year are J. Stuart Blackton, Jesse D. Hampton, and Edwin Carewe.

"The competition for motion picture supremacy during 1920 will be waged more intensively than ever in cinema history," reads Mr. Brunet's statement, but Pathe Exchange, Inc., is prepared for any eventualities, with unquestionably the strongest array of producers, directors, stars and feature productions that has ever marked its long career. The merit of Pathe productions should be thoroughly demonstrated by the releases we have arranged for the early part of the year.

Paul Brunet Announces Strong Schedule for Early 1920

"Inaugurating the year, which for us is rich in prospect, will be one of J. Stuart Blackton's greatest screen achievements, 'My Husband's Other Wife,' starring Robert Gordon and Sylvia Breamer, who are admirably supported by Warren Chandler and May McAvoy. There is no doubt about 'My Husband's Other Wife' being Mr. Blackton's best picture in recent months. It is a story dealing with stage life, and, in addition to its great dramatic appeal, has the added advantage of possessing an atmosphere that always finds favor with the public. It will be released January 4th, and marks the third Blackton feature on the Pathe schedule.

"Following 'My Husband's Other Wife,' the next release will be Jesse D. Hampton's second Pathe special, 'Fighting Cressy,' dated for issue on January 11. Blanche Sweet, popular heroine of 'A Woman of Pleasure,' is starred in 'Fighting Cressy,' which was adapted from one of Bret Harte's greatest stories. There is all the romantic charm of every Hart story in 'Fighting Cressy,' which, while a Western plot, of the early sixties, is of a vastly different type from the ordinary gun-play production of the West.

"Edwin Carewe appears as an independent producer with 'The Web of Deceit,' in which Dolores Cassinelli is starred, and which will be released on January 18.

"'Other Men's Shoes,' first of the Edgar Lewis specials to be issued by Pathe, is to be released on February 1st. It is one of Mr. Lewis' best of strong-men plays, vibrating with life, human in every detail, and is a worthy tribute to his art. Pathe will release a series of Mr. Lewis' big productions and feels every assurance that they will all be of the highest type of motion picture. They have only to equal the strength of 'Other Men's Shoes' to be listed as exceptional attractions.

"During the coming year, every feature released under the Pathe banner will rate with the finest photoplays."

A. S. Kirkpatrick, General Manager of Robertson-Cole

KIRKPATRICK SAYS

"YESTERDAY belongs to the ages in the motion picture business and each day becomes history at midnight. Such is the speed of its development.

"This remarkable fact is due to freedom of action and ideas. Combinations, or the efforts of one branch of the industry to hog the entire field, have not played any part in this success.

"Robertson-Cole has consistently fostered the spirit of independence responsible for the mighty artistic and financial achievements of all concerned.

"We have always encouraged the independent producer and such encouragement has done much to prevent commercialized standardization of production and consequent throttling of the eternal struggle for perfection.

"We have constantly supported the viewpoint of the independent exhibitor and support of this character is in a measure responsible for the era of beautiful theatres and truly artistic presentations.

"And it is the intention of Robertson-Cole to continue backing with every particle of good will the independence of action which has been responsible more than any one thing for the remarkable growth of the motion picture business."

"Pay on Leaving" on Metro Film

HAVING billed Nazimova in "Revelation" for November 27 and 28, the manager of the Morris Grand Theatre, in Hot Springs, S. D., announced that all patrons attending the Thanksgiving matinee would be allowed to pay when they went out, if they were satisfied they had their money's worth. Every one paid, and the theatre made a clean-up on this piece of showmanship. This, it is believed, was the first time such an experiment had been tried anywhere, so far as officials of Metro Pictures Corporation could discover.

The exact conditions under which this scheme was worked make it of particular interest to a large number of small exhibitors who are intent upon raising the quality of pictures shown in their houses and obtaining increased admission prices without encountering charges of "profiteering." It was not considered by Metro officials as a mere novelty or as a good permanent policy, but as a very sound expedient to improve present trade conditions in the exhibition field.

Novel Scheme Worked by Small Theatre on a Nazimova Picture

The Morris Grand Theatre in Hot Springs, S. D., which is a small town, decided to book Nazimova in "Revelation" at the highest rental the theatre had paid for a picture, because of a demand from patrons for high-class features and the prestige running the great Russian star would give the house. It was figured that even though some money should be lost through the "pay-as-you-leave" offer, the prestige gained would increase the standing of the theatre and of other rentals.

In announcing the special attraction the management distributed handbills throughout the city, printed as follows: "Thanksgiving, Nazimova—Nazimova in 'Revelation.' The world's greatest screen artist in a wonderful picture. Morris Grand Theatre. Thursday-Friday, Nov. 27-28. Matinee 3 p. m. Evening 7:15-9 p. m. Admission 35c and tax and 20c and tax. Notice to Patrons: At the Thursday Matinee Patrons Will be Allowed to Pay as They Go Out if Satisfied They Have Had Their Money's Worth. If it is Not Worth the Price, it Costs You Nothing."

At the bottom of one of these handbills in the manager's handwriting was a notation: "Some picture! Every one paid going out." This was sent to Charles Klein, Metro branch manager in Denver, and forwarded by him to the home office with a note that it was a suggestion that might prove of value to thousands of exhibitors "who have their eyes set on putting over big things."

"It is to be noted," Mr. Klein's letter stated, "that the prices charged for admission—35 and 20 cents—are exceptionally high for a small house. Many exhibitors would balk at charging such prices under the circumstances for fear of angering their patronage and encountering a charge of profiteering, which is applied to almost anything today and is highly desirable to avoid. This case shows the thing can be done, and done to the complete satisfaction of everybody.

"I call this remarkable showmanship and I am glad to pass it along through you to anybody that is faced by similar conditions, and I think many are. This is the dilemma—a demand from patrons for the very best pictures and a reluctance to pay the high prices necessary. The manager of the Morris Grand, with fine discrimination, shifted the burden from himself to his patrons. He said, in effect: 'Here is a better picture, are you willing to pay for it?' It was a fine gambling chance, and he won—big.

"Every one paid. I think he will try it again until he has his clientele educated to the new conditions of things. Furthermore, the thing is bound to build prestige for his theatre."

Frank G. Hall, President of Hallmark Picture Corporation

Four Art Directors Added to Metro Staff

Four new art directors have been added to the technical staff of the Metro studios in Hollywood. A. H. Webster, Sidney Ullman, A. W. Alley and A. E Freudeman are the newcomers. Together with Amos Myers and John Holden, who have worked on several Screen Classics, Inc., productions, these men will be associated with M. P. Staulcup, supervising art director.

"Other Men's Shoes" to Be Released Feb. 1

"Other Men's Shoes," Edgar Lewis's initial production for distribution by Pathe, will be released on February 1st "Other Men's Shoes" is a picturization of Andrew Soutar's famous novel of the same name. Two exceptionally high-class characterizations are portrayed in "Other Men's Shoes" by Crawford Kent, who has the lead, a dual role; and Harold Forshay, who plays the second "heavy."

"Lurking Peril" Serial Given Release

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, reports that the newest serial handled by that company, "The Lurking Peril" will be released during the last week in December. This serial features such well known stars as George Larkin and Anne Luther.

Fox Film Corporation is decidedly in the runing this Christmas and here are some of the reasons. They include William Fox, Winfield R. Sheehan, William Russell, Gladys Brockwell, Shirley Mason, Madlaine Traverse, George Walsh, Pearl White, Buck Jones, William Farnum, and Tom Mix

Several Arrow Deals Pending

Shallenberger and Dana in the West; Advertising to Be Heavy in New Year

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, accompanied by his sales manager P. B. Dana, are in Chicago with two new serials to offer the independent states rights buyers. They also have several new features that they will show. Dr. Shallenberger intends to spend only a day or two in Chicago before proceeding to the Pacific coast, where he has some important deals pending.

P. B. Dana will spend a week in Chicago before going to French Lick Springs, Ind., with Mrs. Dana for a well earned rest. Before the first of the year an announcement will be made by the Arrow Film Corporation which, it is said, will be of much interest to all independent exchanges. It is stated by Dr. Shallenberger that the Arrow's policy will not be changed for the year 1920, that it will continue to handle only new features and short subjects and the best obtainable. However, there will be a number of new productions and series of productions handled by Arrow that will appeal to all state right buyers.

"I believe this coming year will be the biggest the independent exchanges have ever seen," stated Dr. Shallenberger. "The Arrow will be in line to offer the independent producers bigger and better inducement, which means we will be able to secure for the independent buyers bigger and better productions. Within a short time Arrow will make an announcement that will be especially good news to the Independent and we are laying plans for the biggest year we have ever had."

Mr. Dana stated that the Arrow had made an appropriation for advertising next year that will mean that every productnon handled by Arrow will be exploited in a big way.

Hodkinson Issues Rated High

Screen Opinions' Year Book Gives Twelve Hodkinson Releases Prominent Places

W. W. HODKINSON releases achieved a high rating among the big pictures of the year in the Exhibitors' Red Book, the annual edition of Screen Opinions, which is devoted to independent reviews of photoplays and published by the Cahill-Igoe Company of Chicago. No less than twelve productions distributed by the Hodkinson organization are given a prominent place in the list of pictures recommended by Screen Opinions, it is reported. Six of the Hodkinson releases are said to be classified among the year's best productions and six others have won a grading among the year's best average plays.

Benjamin E. Hampton's productions of "The Westerners," by Stewart Edward White and Zane Grey's "Desert Gold," have won approbation as Class A attractions. "Sahara," J. Parker Read, Jr.'s first Louise Glaum production, also come in for the same high praise. It is said that "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," Miss Glaum's second picture, made under J. Parker Read, Jr., auspices, though reviewed too late to gain a place in the Red Book's prize production list, is awarded a "'Pick O' The Plays" rating in the current week's issue of Screen Opinion.

J. Warren Kerrigan is stated to have received Class A recognition through his "Come Again Smith." "The Heart of Rachael" and "Two Gun Betty," two Bessie Barriscale pictures, released by Hodkinson, also received the highest possible rating.

Among the best average plays listed are the following W. W. Hodkinson releases: "The Best Man," "The End of the Game" and "The Drifters," all starring J. Warren Kerrigan.

Plans of Sunlight Arc Corp.

Capital Stock Increased to Ten Millions; Mechanism Suited to Pictures

WITH a New Year's statement that is revolutionary in its facts, J. Justice Harmer, President of the Sunlight Arc Corp., takes the floor and explains the 1920 activities of his firm.

In the first place the Corporation has publicly anounced that its capital stock will be immediately increased to $10,000,000, this increase being necessary to take care of the business in prospect.

One of the most interesting statements and one that will be far-reaching in its effects is one referring to the elimination of all foot-lights in theatres by substituting the Sun Light Arc. By this newest means the actor will no longer be forced to ply his art under the concentrated and blinding rays of the old-style foot-light. Instead the setting will be bathed in the correct tint and intensity of light by these powerful arcs placed in positions determined upon by the expert illuminating engineers of the Sun Light Corporation.

Through experiments it has been found that the carbon arc used in the Sun Light mechanism is admirably suited for projecting pictures. The source is well centered, steady and easily controlled and its intensity is far above any of the arcs now in use on projectors. It is probable that further developments in this line will be made known shortly.

With the desire to increase the production of coal and other earthy substances, the Sun Light Arc will be brought into play to illuminate working territory so as to make night work as safe and profitable as day work. Benefits of such a scheme do not need to be repeated here.

Announcement is also made by the Sun Light Arc Corporation that Al Kaufman of Famous Players has become financially interested in the proposition and has been made a member of the Board of Directors and of the Executive Committee.

Confusion on Tarzan Subject

"The Return of Tarzan" Must Not Be Confounded with Earlier Offering

THERE seems to be a misconception prevalent regarding the recently announced production of "The Return of Tarzan." In the minds of many this feature is being confused with the earlier Tarzan subjects, and in some cases, taken as a re-issue of these former features.

"The Return of Tarzan" is Numa Pictures Corporation's screening of Edgar Rice Burroughs' latest book by the same title. It has the same central character in Tarzan, the son of English gentlefolk, who, born during the presence of his parents in Africa, is left an orphan by their deaths and reared to young manhood by an ape. Tarzan's chance meeting with a scientist has resulted in his journeying to England and there establishing his right to the title of his family.

This latest tale introduces Tarzan bound for Paris, to return to his jungle home. His experience in civilization has been a wry one, and in a spirit of self sacrifice for the happiness of the girl he has grown to love, he is relinquishing his title to a cousin with whom he fancies his sweetheart enamoured. Following exciting adventure in Paris and later in Algiers, he finally reaches the forest land and reverts back to the fighting, half-human habits of his early associates.

Gene Pollar is playing "Tarzan," with a supporting cast that includes Estelle Taylor, George Romain, Walter Miller, Armond Cortez, Donna Ramirez, Louis Stearns and John Sturgeon.

On the Realart Christmas tree which is most brilliantly lighted for an organization so young, are found Alice Brady, star; John S. Woody, general manager; Mary Miles Minter, star; Allan Dwan, director; Constance Binney, star, and Emile Chautard, director.

"This Is Goldwyn Year" Encored

Recapitulation of All Accomplished Issued by That Concern

GOLDWYN Pictures Corporation is going to retain its slogan, "This Is a Goldwyn Year" to cover the season of 1920. The Board of Directors of this producing and distributing organization met last week. Plans for the future to be placed in immediate operation were considered, and the history of the past year was checked off step by step, from the formation of the Eminent Authors, last April, to the latest alliance that brought the DuPonts and other great financial interests into the company.

The advance made by the Goldwyn organization in every department of production and distribution, justifies, in the opinion of the company's directors, the assertion that "This Was a Goldwyn Year". In support of the declaration, the following happenings in the growth of the corporation are cited in a formal statement issued last week.

The statement reads in part. "On the first of last January, Samuel Goldwyn had a number of projects in view for the enlargement of his organization that it might assume a dominant position as the source of the greatest motion pictures that modern art and science could produce. Confident of the success of his plans, he imbued the entire organization with the enthusiasm expressed in the slogan, 'This Is a Goldwyn Year.'

"Facilities at the Culver City Studios had been perfect to a point where the Coast equipment permitted production on a large scale without over-crowding. The directorial force had been increased and a permanent body of players located at Culver City, was being organized as the Goldwyn Repertory Company. This was the situation, last May, when Goldwyn departed from all precedent by obtaining six of the most popular novelists in America under exclusive contract for a long term of years, to co-operate in the production of their own novels and stories.

"Incorporated as Eminent Authors Pictures, with Rex Beach as President, the authors included in the alliance, representing the finest literary talent of the country, are Gertrude Atherton, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Rupert Hughes, Basil King, Gouverneur Morris and Leroy Scott. During the summer and fall months, a number of the Eminent Authors pictures were produced on the Coast, with the authors at the studios to assist the directors and players.

"Not long after the launching of the Eminent Authors, Goldwyn consummated one of the most important alliances in the history of amusement enterprises when the Shuberts, A. H. Woods and the Selwyns became an active part of the organization and the capitalization of the company was increased from three to twenty million dollars.

"The far-reaching significance of this merger of motion picture and theatrical interests may be readily appreciated when it is considered that the Shuberts control a majority of the leading theatres throughout the country, and that the picture rights to the stage successes of all three of the producing concerns revert to Goldwyn. This means that for years to come there will be a practically unlimited quantity of material available for the screen.

"The last of Goldwyn's accomplishments justifying the statement that "This Was a Goldwyn Year", developed only a few weeks ago when the Duponts, in association with other representatives of great financial interests, identified themselves with the company and the stock was placed on the market.

"With such men as H. F. DuPont, vice-president of the DuPont Powder Co.; Eugene E. DuPont, W. W. Laird, of Laird & Co., Wilmington; R. R. M. Carpenter, vice-president of the DuPont Powder Co.; C. C. Kurtz, vice-president of the Wilmington Trust Co., E. V. R. Thayer, president of the Chase National Bank of New York; Duncan A. Holmes, vice-president of the Chase Securities Co.; William Topkis, George T. Bissell, G. W. Davison, vice-president of the Central Union Trust Co., of New York; MacMillan Hoopes and Abbot M. Wittenberg, acting on the board of directors, there is no question about Goldwyn Pictures Corporation having taken a place among the country's great artstic and commercial enterprises. And 1921 will be another Goldwyn Year."

H. H. Cudmore, President and Gen'l Mgr. of Argus Enterprises, Inc.

Cohn Going to Coast

In keeping with announcements made in recent weeks regarding plans for the development of Hall Room Boys Comedies, Harry Cohn, who is secretary and treasurer of Hall Room Boys Photoplays, Inc., is to leave for the West Coast after the Christmas holidays to take over personal supervision of production of the two reelers.

After making arrangements for the broader exploitation of the comedies in New York, where a publicity bureau has begun operation in cooperation with exchanges which are handling the releases.

In the meantime the Cohns have started several new exploitational aids for the Hall Room releases. Weekly sales letters are supplied each exchange as well as the regulation publicity aids —newspaper stories, newspaper publicity cuts, combination advertisement cuts, etc. Present plans indicate that these already successful releases will become even more popular.

Screen Gets Kaufman's Writings

Noted Editorial Writer to Do "Weekly Page" for Selznick

LEWIS J. SELZNICK is about to introduce one of America's best known editorial writers to the screen.

Almost everyone knows Herbert Kaufman, whose human editorials have appeared for years in a nation-wide chain of newspapers, whose pen has dipped down into the heart of humanity and delivered messages of optimism much to the point, straight from the shoulder, and have a wide reading audience.

Announcing this, Mr. Selznick said:

"Herbert Kaufman's Weekly Page won't appear in the big Sunday newspapers next year. It will be published under my direction in the motion picture theatres of the United States.

"Thomas W. Lawson once said that he'd 'rather own Kaufman's God-driven pen than Rockefeller's and Morgan's combined fortunes.'

"The Chicago Tribune, 'the world's greatest newspaper,' considers 'Herbert Kaufman's name is better known than that of any living writer of editorials,' and Sir Arthur Pearson, long Northcliffe's main rival in the British publishing field, estimates Herbert Kaufman 'the greatest thought-moulder of our time.'

"I believe that I am introducing the most powerful pen on earth to the screen. I am sure that I am adding the writer with the greatest following of any man alive to the list of distinguished authors now expressing themselves in film. And I know that the inauguration of Herbert Kaufman's Weekly, the first and only 'periodical in action,' is the most significant move to date in the motion picture industry.

"Herbert Kaufman's Weekly means the development of the motion picture theatre into a tremendous public opinion-making force.

"For the first time in human history a great thinker, a deep student, an international authority on social and political affairs, on big business and on human nature will be able to turn his brain inside out and empty the pictures as well as the thoughts it has stored into the minds of his audience.

"I am founding a new journalism.

"Herbert Kaufman's Weekly is not a pictorial review, but a highly organized special feature, with all the resources of the studio to illuminate and intensify the unique thoughts of an editor who can interest more people than any writer on earth.

"It will be announced (among other publications) in the Saturday Evening Post of Dec. 27, in a four-page spread at a cost of $20,000 in this medium alone.

"Think of it—$20,000 for one ad, one time. But don't simply think how big the amount is—think how big the man is who justifies it.

"The date for the release of the first Kaufman Weekly has been set; it is far more important to set the standard first reel Weekly.

"It will be released through Select Pictures."

Ruth Roland Serial Is Released Dec. 28

Mystery, romance and adventure judiciously mixed with action that sends the story along at top speed for its fifteen episodes are Path's outstanding claims for its new serial, "The Adventures of Ruth," of which Ruth Roland is producer, author and star and which will be released on December 28.

This is the first production of Miss Roland's own company, Ruth Roland Serials, Inc. Herbert Hayes is leading man.

First National to Release "Two Weeks"

Just before leaving for the Coast last week, Sidney A. Franklin finished cutting and titling Constance Talmadge's third First National picture, "Two Weeks," and First National has set the release date for the first week in January. The initial New York showing will take place at the Strand some time in February.

Doris Kenyon Starts on "The Harvest Moon"

Doris Kenyon has begun work on her second big W. W. Hodkinson release, "The Harvest Moon," at the Leah Baird studios, Cliffside, N. J. Director J. Searle Dawley is in charge of the production which is an adaptation of the stage success by Augustus Thomas. It is reported that Mr. Dawley, Augustus Thomas and Theodore C. Deitrich have ben working for three weeks on the screen adaption of "The Harvest Moon." All three predict a picture version which will surpass the stage production in point of thrills and artistry.

Filming of "Fortune Hunter" Completed

"The Fortune Hunter," Vitagraph's screen version of Winchell Smith's stage success, with Earle Williams in the title role, has been completed. It will be one of Vitagraph's early 1920 offerings and will form one of a series of stage plays which will be presented during the coming year. Another, "The Sporting Duchess," with Alice Joyce in the title role, is also nearing completion and will be shown shortly after the release of "The Fortune Hunter."

HERE is another of those perfectly delightful comedy dramas in which Mary MacLaren has lately been showing what she can do—to the accompaniment of spontaneous laughter and applause. The first of these charming comedies was "The Weaker Vessel," followed by that big chuckle—"Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie." Now comes "The Pointing Finger," with big, boyish, likable David Butler to play opposite and Johnnie Cook, the inimitable, to lend his finished comedy relief. "Picture Monopoly but a Dream"

A. S. Kirkpatrick of Robertson-Cole Gives Firms Views

EMPHATICALLY declaring that it is the firm intention of Robertson-Cole to back the independent idea in the production and exhibition of motion pictures, A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, has stated in an interview that he is supremely confident that combinations and financial alliances which intend to entirely dominate the motion picture field will fail of their purpose. In any battle that might be staged he is certain the independent exhibitor will defeat the efforts of any who seek complete control.

"This is particularly true of any financial combination which attempts to resort to the squeeze-out method of handling exhibitors or who otherwise attempt to introduce financial rough-stuff," Mr. Kirkpatrick declared. "This industry has developed in independence and it has developed in a far greater measure than any other industry because of that fact.

"We must assume that the natural result of absolute domination would mean the standardization of production. It would mean a set allowance for each production. It would mean a set prsentation of each picture, and a definite schedule of prices and needless to say those who dominate would not come out second best in any such arrangement.

"Standardize production and you throttle the freedom of action, the freedom of artistic development essential to the motion picture. If this domination had been completed a few years ago where would Grauman, Rothapfel, Reisenfeld, Tom Moore, and the other big figures of presentation be today? Where would the wonderful presentations that mark the theatre be today?

"Combinations of capital for the production of motion pictures is not, however, a weakening thing. On the contrary it is strengthening. Similar combinations for the exhibition of motion pictures is a strengthening aid, in fact, both are the natural developments of the rapid and great growth of both branches of the business. It is when these combinations endeavor to become monopolies that they seem menacing, but it is just at that time that they cease to be a factor, for they have then arrived at the moment of death.

"Fostering everything which makes for the honest and fair development of the business with regard for the interests of all concerned, Robertson-Cole will continue in the future as in the past to lend every particle of its influence and good will to the men responsible. It will support freedom of development in production and exhibition in every way, because it is certain that freedom is the secret of the successful past and the guarantee of the future.

"All this is nothing new in the Robertson-Cole policy. Since the entrance of Robertson-Cole into the domestic field as bankers to the producer more than a year ago the trade well knows the independent producer has had our encouragement and support. We have made every effort to assist those who, with the good of the industry ever at heart, have been striving to make pictures of an increasingly high standard of excellence.

"In closing this brief summary of my views I will take the liberty of repeating what I said when the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation was organized:

"Of prime importance is the establishment of the exhibitor on the basis of a business partner.

"Therefore his criticism and advice must be accepted as the suggestion of one business partner to another.

"It is to our mutual interest that the product be the best, the price fair, and that the square deal shall dominate business relations.

"No industry can survive if any particular division of the industry plays the hog.

"The distributor cannot gouge the exhibitor and expect not to suffer from the reaction which affects the entire industry.

"The exhibitor cannot compel the distributor and producer to operate without profit and not expect to suffer from a poor quality of product.

"If the sense of fair dealing does not dictate this a desire for profits and plain business horse sense should.

"Producers and distributors will flourish through the exhibitors prosperity—AND they know it."

"Broken Blossoms" Draws High Figure on Sale

Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., the American company holding all foreign rights to D. W. Griffith's artistic masterpiece, "Broken Blossoms," announces the sale of the rights in Great Britain last week for what it claims is the largest figure ever paid for a cinema production in that country.

George Bowles, general European manager for Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., cables at the same time that he has been forced to open larger offices for the American distributing concern at 6 Rue de la Paix, in Paris, where plans are now ripening for the presentation of this production in one of the largest theatres in Paris. Mr. Bowles has refused several very big cash offers for the French rights to "Broken Blossoms" and prefers to see to its presentation in that city under his personal supervision.

Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., has also closed a deal by which this company takes over all remaining foreign rights to the great Griffith spectacle "Intolerance."

Henley Production for Pathe Being Cut

"Skin Deep," the second Hobart Henley Production soon to be released through Pathe, is now in the cutting room, according to a report from the Henley Studio the other day.

The picture which is another of Mrs. Sidney Drew's adaptation is based upon a story by Beulah Poynter and has to do with the lives of two old maids who after living through years of poverty and enforced "single blessedness" find themselves heirs to several hundred thousand dollars. Capital no longer being a barrier and now a decided asset, they start in search of beauty and romance.

Bess Gerhardt Morrison has the stellar role.

The latest release of Prizma Natural Color Pictures is "Memories." It is a picturization of John Greenleaf Whittier's immortal poem. This marks the first departure of the Prizma Company from the line of scenes so far released by this company.

"Blind Husbands" Well Received

Capitol Management and Critics Give Film Much Praise

THE officials of the Universal Film are enthusiastic over the reception accorded to the showing of "Blind Husbands" at the Capitol during the week of December 7th. In connection with the showing of the feature John Wenger, the Capitol's scenic artist, comes in for a round of praise for his especially fine prologue to the production. All of Mr. Wenger's creations are worked out by a system of lights thrown on screens. In arranging the prologue for "Blind Husbands" he took the scene on the mountain-top, using the three figures, the husband, the wife, and the other man. A soloist sang "The Elegy" as the curtains parted and through the haze the monument shown in the picture was slowly brought out. "The prologue was received with enthusiasm," it is said.

Edward H. Bowes, manager of the Capitol, is reported to have expressed his entire satisfaction with the picture during its run at the big Broadway theatre. According to a report from Universal, Mr. Bowes on the last day of the showing at the Capitol expressed himself as follows to one of the Universal officials.

"It is certainly an extraordinarily beautiful production. It was directed by a master hand and was handled to perfection throughout. I think it very significant that even the dramatic critics thought so much of it as to give it a second interview during the running here. We will be very happy to receive many more such excellent pictures."

The Universal report further calls attention to the favorable criticism that was passed upon the picture by the reviewers of the various New York dailies. Some of these criticisms submitted in the Universal report are reproduced in the following lines. The New York Times critic said "'Blind Husbands' is superior to most of the year's productions." Another phrase in the three-quarter column review, praising the production was, "'Blind Husbands' is interesting throughout and at times supremely compelling."

Harriet Underhill, dramatic critic of the New York Tribune, said in her review, "'Blind Husbands' is an effective picture." The New York American said: "It is sure to occasion no little comment." The Morning Telegraph critic considered it "one of the three best pictures of the year," saying, "For detail, atmosphere and penetrating character drawing, it is in a class by itself. The views are so perfect it is hard to believe the picture was made in California. It serves to prove that after all 'the movies' do move."

Allison Smith of the New York Globe reviewed the picture twice during the week's run. In her first review she said: "'Blind Husbands' is a most curious and interesting production—is far more interesting than any of the machine-made pictures produced by the best companies to feature the most prilliant stars." In her second review she said, "Our second thoughts on the first night's showing of 'Blind Husbands' are even more enthusiastic than the first."

Octavus Cohen's First Story for Goldwyn

"Two Cents Worth of Humaneness," an original story by Octavus Roy Cohen, who is under contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to write four stories a year for production at the Goldwyn studios, has been completed and accepted as a starring vehicle for Madge Kennedy, who has just finished "The Blooming Angel" and is ready to start on her next production.

Goldwyn Signs Up Noted Female Pantomimist

Mme. Flora Revalles, the mime and dancer who appeared in this country with the Diaghileff ballet, has been signed up by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to play a leading role in "Earthbound," the second Basil King Eminent Authors picture which Goldwyn will produce. In signing up Mme. Revalles, Goldwyn has acquired a pantomimist of reputation.

Great Booking Volume by Equity

Record is Claimed for "Eyes of Youth" the First Release

WHAT is, perhaps, the most voluminous amount of bookings received on a motion picture feature, is claimed by Equity Pictures for its first release "Eyes of Youth" in which Clara Kimball Young is starred.

William Fox and Marcus Loew have booked for immediate runs in Greater New York, which will require no less than ten prints to satisfy, while Asher Brothers, Lubliner and Trinz and Balaban and Katz have contracted for the picture in all of their western houses. Asher Brothers are playing their fourteen houses and Lubliner and Trinz have secured the film for all their places.

The Twentieth Century and Gold Theatres on 12th Street, Chicago, will play the picture simultaneous with the big circuits, while the Castle Theatre in the loop, follows the three weeks run at the Playhouse by a two weeks engagement, after which it goes to another loop house.

Isaac Libson of Cincinnati opens at the Strand Theatre, Louisville for an indefinite engagement with "Eyes of Youth" and two of the first run houses at Cleveland, The Orpheum and Alhambra played the Young feature day and date.

The Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, and the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, played three weeks run with the film and Long Beach, Pasadena, Oakland and other Los Angeles and Frisco houses are now featuring the picture for longer periods than usual.

The Waldorf Theatre, Boston, has launched "Eyes of Youth" on an indefinite engagement with a three weeks minimum and it is now thought the huge Boston Theatre will follow with a two weeks run at the conclusion of the Waldorf dates.

Providence, Rhode Island, and Portland, Maine, enjoyed extended engagements, which were induced by exceptional business while Portland, Oregon, reports unusual business for the pre-holiday season and an extended run.

Chattanooga and Knoxville, Tenn., at increased admission prices will launch the film early in January, with Atlanta, Nashville, Memphis and New Orleans to follow.

The Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans placed bookings with the Equity for each and every house in their huge circuit and S. A. Lynch's organization is now in communication with the various exchanges in his respective territories prelmiinary to long bookings in each of his cities.

Ruben and Finkelstein have set dates in Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, Crookston, Virginia and other northern cities, with Milwaukee and Beloit, Wis., already concluded at unusual gross receipts.

The Playhouse at Chicago enjoyed a three weeks run at increased admissions and announced the house record broken the very first day, as did the Imperial at Frisco and Kinema at Los Angeles. The Waldorf, Boston, increased admissions seventy-five percent and the Cleveland houses advanced their rates fifty percent.

All in all, Equity believes it has every reason to be content with its first production and coming on the heels of this, President Herbert K. Sonborn of Equity announces that he has seen most of "The Forbidden Woman" the second Equity picture, and that it compares favorably with "Eyes of Youth" in every way.

"The Confession" Meets With Wide Favor

Interesting reports continue to arrive at the New York offices concerning the enthusiasm with which middle west exhibitors are receiving "The Confession," the drama by Hal Reid which was adapted and produced from the stage play of the same name by the National Film Corporation. Most of the reports are in the form of informal letters and wires from Joe Brandt, general representative of the country, who is making a tour of the west in the interest of the production.

Brandt, in a recent letter, declared that the Boston reviewer who ranked this production with "The Birth of a Nation" and "Broken Blossoms" had been borne out by reviews of the picture in a middle west city. "The Confession," according to this critic, whose review was prompted by a private showing of the piece, "is a distinctly tragic story, the sadness of which is tempered with some of the most genuine comedy and human interest it has ever been my pleasure to witness on the screen."

Brandt is disposing of territorial rights for the picture rapidly.

Immediately upon his return to New York Brandt will take over distribution and exploitation of "Hearts and Masks," from the novel by Harold MacGrath, in which Elinor Field is starred.

Actual U-Boat Atrocities Shown

C. B. Price Has Film of Subs Sinking Their Hapless Victims

MOTION pictures taken aboard the German "U" Boat 35—the pet sub sea craft of the Kaiser and showing for the first time the manner in which vessels were sent to the bottom and the hardships forced upon the boys fighting the submarines, are now in the United States and will be ready for release at an early date.

These pictures which were taken to show the Kaiser the way his giants of the sea were working, were captured by English sub-chasers after a running fight in which the "U" 35 was captured and it is by special permission of the British Admiralty that these mid-ocean scenes will be given to the American public. C. B. Price of C. B. Price, Inc., now has the film.

English critics claimed the submarine film to be the greatest of the war. There is nothing faked about it. The rolling of the German craft in mid-ocean together with the actual stopping of ships and the verdict to "get off" and the search for plunder and finally the end are all shown in detail in the great submarine film drama.

"My European agents spared no expense in getting this great film," said Mr. Price. "As soon as I read despatches of the English critics, I decided that American film fans would demand to see in actuality just what the "U" boat campaign really meant.

"Throughout the war the dread of the submarine was manifested on the first page of all dailies and harrowing were their accounts. In many instances we were inclined to believe that the stories of the sinking in mid-ocean of the largest of up-to-date craft were greatly exaggerated. Now that we have the film in our possession I am willing to admit that the accounts as received in this country were founded upon fact and not fiction.

"The film has been in New York for the past two weeks and during that time I have had at least six Naval officers look over the greatest of war motion pictures. Each and every one of these American officers travelled the high seas in search of the German Sub. These officers declared the film to be the most sensational and startling evidence of the U-boat methods."

Attacks on seven ships are shown, and every one of them went to the bottom. One thing which the film does not show is the fate of the U-boat's human victims. The captains of some of the sunken ships are seen on board the submarine taking exercise on the deck, but there is nothing to show what happened to the crews.

Following are some of the criticisms sent to Mr. Price by his London agents.

"The greatest two-reeler ever screened."—Film Renter.

"There should be no two opinions as to the sucecss this wonderful little topical will meet with. No matter how full up the showman may be, he should shelve something to give his patrons an opportunity of witnessing this film."—Kinematograph Weekly.

"An astonishing cinema record of the Exploits of a German Submarine, one of the most fascinating pictures ever made available."—The Bioscope.

"We have seldom seen an interest film so packed with incidents as this. It is certainly no exxaggeration to say that few two-reelers will prove of greater drawing power than this."—The Cinema.

"It is safe to say that of all films dealing with the war there has been nothing more thrilling. Germany is condemned by her own cinematograph records."—Daily Express.

"One of the most instructive films—we saw the torpedo discharged we saw the doomed ship quiver as she was struck, we saw her later sink into the sea, but we saw nothing of her crew or what was done with them."—Morning Post.

Polish Actress Appears in Selznick Subject

An announcement of interest from the Selznick studios is that Mlle. Halina Bruzovna, one of Poland's leading actresses, is now appearing before the camera at Fort Lee in a Herbert Kaufman editorial known as "The Faded Butterfly."

Difficulties Are Many in Taking Scenics

Making motion picture scenics is anything but a joke. So say H. H. Brownell and Jock Rantz, cameraman and director for the Adventure Scenics released by Robertson-Cole. In talking over this phase of the game, they said:

"At the time we went into Central Oregon to make "Just Over Yonder" our second feature, it was July in the rest of the country, but Central Oregon was frozen beneath a mantle of snow several feet in depth.

"We feel that we have been very fortunate in obtaining some very fine views of the volcanic country in and about the dense forests of Oregon. We discovered a great number of extinct volcanoes, and obtained some very beautiful cloud effects over these.

"Heart Appeal in Pictures the Thing"

Pictures may come and pictures may go, but it is the firm belief of Edward Sloman, who is directing Bessie Barriscale in "The Luck of Geraldine Laird" from the book by Kathleen Norris, for Robertson-Cole, that the type of play which will live as long as motion pictures live is the one which has the touch of human interest and heart appeal.

In discussing this interesting phase, Mr. Sloman said:

"People are curious beings, always reaching and striving for something just out of their grasp, forever thinking that the something worth having lies just over the hill. But it usually turns out that that which they thought was so desirable from a distance is no finer than that which they have close to them. It is then that they turn from the chimera of dreams to the real and the true.

"Beloved Cheater" Is on Market

"THE Beloved Cheater," the Robertson-Cole special starring Lew Cody, and made by Gasnier, will be released the latter part of December. From the heavy bookings received Robertson-Cole believes new box office figures for a special will be made by this picture of hearts and sweethearts. Robertson-Cole is certain that "The Beloved Cheater" is without doubt the best exploited picture ever released under the same banner.

"The Beloved Cheater" was directed by William Christy Cabanne. In it the sets are example of the calibre of the pictures to be released by Robertson-Cole in the coming year. Gasnier and Cabanne both agree that "The Beloved Cheater" is a 1920 production given to the public just a year ahead of the times.

In making "The Beloved Cheater," Gasnier spared neither time nor money. When he was given the story he accepted it with the proviso that he could take his own good time in producing it and the fruit of his efforts will shortly be in the hands of the exhibitor.

Prints of the next Robertson-Cole special have been in the hands of the exchanges for several weeks and one hundred per cent. have been the bookings for first runs by this society drama. Officials of Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation declare that the best theatres in the United States will play "The Beloved Cheater" for special runs.

There is ample press and publicity material together with several novelties in the way of advertising tie-ups and business getting letters and post cards.

A special effort was made to secure an unusual line of striking ads and cuts and mats of these and of scenes vividly illustrating the high lights of "The Beloved Cheater" are available at all Robertson-Cole Exchanges.

Nothing that might be of value to an exhibitor has been overlooked. Numerous ways of dressing the lobby are explained and several designs for special lobby display photos. These will supplement the colorful posters in one, three, six and twenty-four sheets.

Robertson-Cole believe that there are many possibilities in the way of trailers that have never yet been utilized to the fullest advantage. They have, therefore, prepared a scenario based upon the big scenes of the production which they have tilted in a manner calculated to arouse the greatest interest. This trailer may be booked in advance of showing and great expectations are placed in its drawing powers.

In addition to these aids are attractive slides, a unique herald in two colors, and a special edition of a high grade booklet, illustrated, and full of epigrams from the production, which is called Lew Cody's Lexicon of Love.

The second gun in this campaign was in the form of national advertising in various magazines and periodicals. This was carefully planned with the idea of making the star's name a household word throughout the country and creating a demand for "The Beloved Cheater" in such a manner that the exhibitors felt it before the picture was released.

This space is devoted principally to a prize contest that is open to all fans, and exhibitors everywhere may find it advantageous to work in co-operation with this contest.

Seeing the possibilities that lay in the title, "The Beloved Cheater," L. Wolf Gilbert and Edna Williams have seized upon it as the theme of one of their song compositions which they have called "That Beloved Cheater of Mine." It is for sale on all music stands.

Robertson-Cole Looking for Records from the Lew Cody Picture

Max Glucksmann Reports Increased Business

Mr. Jacobo Glucksmann, manager of the New York office of Max Glucksmann, reports a great increase in activities during the year 1919, even when compared with his previous record.

During the last few weeks some very important contracts have been entered into. The rights have been secured on all Pathe pictures for the year 1920. This will be the 16th consecutive year during which the concern of Max Glucksmann has exploited Pathe pictures, and it is interesting to note that the new arrangement covers a greater extent of territory than ever before, namely Argentine, Uraguay, Chile, Peru and Bolivia.

Now, being prepared for shipment, are copies of the three successes produced by the famous Capellani featuring June Caprice and Creighton Hale; namely, "O'Boy," "The Love Cheat," and the "Damsel in Distress." Release will soon be made of the four Olive Thomas successes, "Toton," "Prudence on Broadway," "Love's Prisoner," and "the Follies Girl."

For Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador the rights have been secured on Mac Sennett's success, "Mickey."

Lull at Universal City Is Over

THE recent lull in activities at Universal City is now at an end, and according to a report from the Universal Film, seven of the bigger producing units have started operations again this week. It is further announced that the comedy, Western and serial companies are continuing work with unabated energy.

Production has started on "The Primrose Path", a drama by Bayard Veiller, author of "Within the Law." Christy Cabanne will direct the photodrama, which will have the featured services of Frank Mayo, with Josephine Hill as his leading woman. Other important players in the cast are Mae Busch, Rudd Christians and Beatrice Burnham. William C. Dowlan has begun work on "Locked Lips" drama, starring Tsuru Aoki, based on Clifford Howard's story, "Blossoms." The Japanese star is supported by Stanhope Wheatcroft, Magda Lane and Jack Abbey.

A strong cast has been selected to support Mary MacLaren in her next production, "The Forged Bridge", work on which has already begun under the supervision of Douglas Gerrard. In the star's support are Thomas Jefferson, Barney Sherry, Dagmar Godowsky, Harold Miller and Frances Raymond. The story is based on "The Sins of the Father" by J. G. Hawks. Erich Von Stroheim, director, promises the early completion of "The Woman in the Plot" on which he has been engaged for the past four months at Universal City. This photodrama is based on "Clothes and Treachery" by the Baroness de Meyer.

A cast is now being selected for James J. Corbett's next Universal feature, "Kentucky Jim", on which production will start some time this week under the guidance of Jack Ford. The star's new vehicle is founded on his former stage success, "Pals" by Edmund Day, author of "The Roundup".

"The Lion Man" and "The Vanishing Dagger", two Universal serials, are proceeding "full steam ahead"! The former, starring Kathleen O'Conner and Jack Perrin, and directed by Al Russell, is now in its fourteenth chapter, while the latter, starring Eddie Polo and supervised by Jacques Jaccard is in its second episode.

Although Tod Browning has already spent almost five months on the production of "The Beautiful Beggar", Universal's forthcoming picture, starring Priscilla Dean, he has wired the New York office it will be four weeks before the final scene has been shot. "The Beautiful Beggar" is based on H. H. Van Loan's picturesque story of Constantinople. "The Virgin of Stamboul", and its principal figures, aside from the title role, are portrayed by Wallace Beery as the sheik; Wheeler Oakman as the Captain of the Black Horse Troop; Edward Burns as the American tourist; E. A. Warren as a Turkish merchant; Clyde Benson as a diplomat; Eugenie Forde as the mother; and Ethel Richie as the favorite of the harem.

"Alias Whispering White", said to be a totally different story of the west by W. C. Tuttle, has been secured by Universal as the next starring vehicle for Harry Carey. In this feature the "Cheyenne Harry" of the screen will have an opportunity not only to display his many talents, but also to demonstrate that he is a capital comedian.

Seven of the Larger Producing Units Resume Work

Big Hampton Pictures for Christmas Week

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that large first-run houses in Indianapolis, Boston, Seattle and Dayton have selected big current Benj. B. Hampton productions to offset the reduction in patronage that is threatened by the pressure of last-minute Christmas shopping.

In Indianapolis, Bingham and Cohen have selected Stewart Edward White's story, "The Westerners" for Christmas week at the Regent Theatre. In Boston, the Hampton's Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold" will be run at the Waldorf Theatre. The Coliseum in Seattle will also run "Desert Gold" during Christmas week. C. J. Gross, owner of Dayton's big photoplay house, the Columbia, has also hit upon the Zane Grey picture as his selection for the week of the 25th.

Next Triangle Release

"A Gamble in Souls," a Thos. H. Ince production featuring Dorothy Dalton and William Desmond, will be released by Triangle Jan. 25. This is the fourth issue released by Triangle under the new system.

Tudor Art Depicted in Hampton Feature

One of the most beautiful pieces of Tuder architecture on the Coast was used by Director Henry King, of the Jesse D. Hampton Studios, in the making of "Haunting Shadows", the Robertson-Cole Superior Picture, which is based upon "The House of a Thousand Candles", the Meredith Nicholson novel, and which will be a holiday release.

The scene of the story is central Indiana, where, in the midst of a forest, stood the great unfinished castle which the grandfather of John Glenarm, the picture's central character, had built. As the story prescribes that a Tuder castle full of books is necessary, Mr. King for a time was stumped. He didn't think there was anything of that sort this side of England.

Then he discovered a home on an estate in the edge of Pasadena, and obtained permission to use it. On account of the authentic background "Haunting Shadows" will interest the student of art and architecture as well as the picture house patron who goes only for the story.

Military Attaches Will Serve as Advisors

According to reports, ten former military attaches, who were officers in the armies of the countries they represent, are now permanently assigned to Universal City to collaborate with Universal directors when a photodrama with a military theme is being produced. They are to outline to the director the military customs of their country, vouch for the propriety of the various uniforms worn in the productions and act as tactical experts in the scenes requiring actual fighting.

Surrounding Lewis J. Selznick in extending Season's Greetings to the industry are Elsie Janis, Zeena Keefe, Owen Moore, Eugene O'Brien, Elaine Hammerstein and Olive Thomas. They are helping keep Select Pictures on a high plane and in demand

Two Educational Expeditions Out

Affiliation with Interchurch Movement Has Much Significance

ALMOST comprehensive plan for the making of travel films is contained in an announcement issued by Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America.

Contracts have been signed by the Interchurch World Movement, which are to result in the establishment of a permanent Division of Films, affiliated with the Educational Films Corporation of America, for the purpose of securing motion pictures which will acquaint one-half of the world how the other half lives. Little known countries are to be invaded by the camera, and one or more expeditions are to be constantly at work in remote corners of the globe.

Expeditions left New York on Friday and Saturday of last week, the first of which Mr. Hammons has placed under the direction of E. Lloyd Sheldon, the well known writer, together with Rev. A. V. Casselman of the Interchurch Movement, and the second to be directed by Willard Price, editor of World Outlook magazine, in co-operation with one of the staff of the Educational Organization.

The first expedition is to make a trip entirely around the world, concentrating in India, Burmah, Java, the Malay States, Thibet, China and Japan, while the second party will work in countries bordering on the Mediterranean Sea. Mr. Sheldon's party expect to return to New York within eight months, but the expedition under Mr. Price will be at work for an indefinite period, and will make temporary headquarters with the Educational Films Company, Ltd., of London.

The Interchurch World Movement, a co-operative plan of Protestant churches, and church agencies for missionary activities both at home and in foreign lands, is an outgrowth of some thirty or more great denominational "forward movements" in the last few years. Notable among those are the Presbyterian New Era Movement and the Methodist Centenary, which held an exposition at Columbus, Ohio, last summer. Dr. Earl S. Taylor is general secretary and executive head of the organization. Mr. H. H. Casselman is the Interchurch executive assigned to the direction of the New Division of Films.

"Pictures are to be secured for two distinct purposes," Mr. Hammons explains, "the primary objective being to supply film from countries where the Interchurch Movement is operating, which practically includes every nook and corner of the world. This subject matter is to be edited for release through the "Educational" exchanges to theatres in every country, as a series of "travel" films under the tentative title "World Outlook on the Screen."

"Other subjects will be constructed for "interested" audiences, as distinguished from the supposedly "disinterested" general public, and these latter films will be released by the Interchurch Movement for use in churches and schools. All subjects are to be built along lines that are unique and original in comparison with present-day offering."

"The usual travel film of today is little more than an animated Baedeker, a guide-book visualized," says Mr. Hammons. "In the new productions, we have devised means whereby a continuous thread of human interest will be a feature of every subject. Mr. Sheldon is planning an interesting story which will make each single-reel an example of entertainment and instruction value."

"The extraordinary opportunities which are at the disposal of these expeditions, can hardly be over-estimated. Representatives of the Interchurch Movement, with long experience and acquaintance in strange lands, will be at hand in every country, and this, in addition to the international connections of the Educational organization, will provide facilities which have never been duplicated."

Billie Burke in a happy moment from her latest Paramount-Artcraft feature, "Wanted, a Husband"

Chester Man Off to Film Nature's Edge

On the fringe of the Antarctic ice fields to the south of Cape Horn lies Elephant Island, where the hot water of a sea-level volcanic crater bubbles beside frigid currents sweeping up from the regions of eternal frost. Richard B. Hoit, a cameraman of the C. L. Chester forces, left New York the other day with the object of photographing this Thermos bottle of nature.

On the way down the cameraman will swing through Tierra del Fuego, the string of glacier-covered islands that receive the buffets of Antarctic currents and protect the Straits of Magellan for the ships of the world.

Mr. Hoit will make his first stop at Valparaiso, on the coast of Chile. From there to the south he will photograph the natural wonders of the Ten Thousand Islands, that lie off the ragged peaks of the Andes.

He anticipates a rough trip, for the wild seas where the Atlantic and Pacific meet to the south of the Horn are feared by the hardiest mariners, who cling to safer passages through the Straits. He expects, however, to obtain many rare and beautiful pictures of strange scenes, which will maintain the high standard of C. L. Chester Productions.

United Starts on Bigger Plane

All Activities Speeded Up; More and Larger Productions Coming

SEVERAL announcements of more than usual importance to the industry at large have just been made by President J. A. Berst, of United Picture Theatres of America, as a result of the meetings of stockholders and directors held during the past week.

The exhibitor-directors of the organization have pledged themselves to make United the biggest in the country.

The great success of the meetings just held and the enthusiastic manner in which all stockholders, directors and officials agreed to work hand in hand to further the interest of the organization of theatres can be taken as a criterion of big things to come.

Output will be increased immediately. In addition to the comedies already being released by United Picture Theatres of America, plans are already in work whereby some twenty-five feature photodramas will be released during the coming year. This will mean an average release of about two features a month, and it is the avowed intention of President Berst and all those associated with him to make these productions a credit to the motion picture industry.

United's scenario department is now at work preparing screen dramas for stars already under contract and selecting stories suitable for other stars that United expects to sign up within a short time.

At the present time, both Dustin Farnum and Florence Reed are working on new productions. Farnum is filming scenes for "Square Shootin' Dan" at the Astra Studios on the Coast, while Miss Reed is posing before the camera at A. J. Bimberg's New York Studio, making scenes for a feature as yet unnamed. In addition to this, the Cuckoo Comedy Company, headed by Bobby Burns and Jobyna Ralston, are busily engaged at the Jacksonville (Florida) Studios of Mark M. Dintenfass, while the famous Cissy Fitzgerald is filming her comedies at the Horsley Studios in Los Angeles.

All of this production activity will be greatly added to within the next few weeks, and it is not only in the producing field that United is going ahead rapidly for its membership is increasing in leaps and bounds.

In December, 1918, theatres served by United numbered 600. In December, 1919, these had increased to 2,943—almost six times the number originally served a year previous. In February, 1919, United served 1,411 theatres; in April, 1919, it was serving 2,195; in July, 1919, the number had reached 2,725, which was still further increased up to December when the total of almost 3,000 had been reached.

This shows the steady growth of the United Picture Theatres, and it is interesting not only because it does this, but also because of the very great increase during the past few months. And all in all, it simply proves that the live wire exhibitor of to-day is quick to take advantage of a proposition that will benefit him and the public, and once he has affiliated himself with such a proposition and knows it to be right, is only too willing and glad to work for it, fight for it, and have a hand in putting it over the top in a big way.

Undersea Film Product of New Methods

A telegraphic conference of the branch exchange managers of the Republic Distributing Corporation on the latest Williamson submarine picture, "Girl of the Sea," in which Betty Hilburn and Chester Barnett are featured, discloses that when Mr. Lewis J. Selznick, Advisory Director of the Republic, purchased this picture for the company he had a live wire proposition. Mr. Williamson in speaking of the "Girl of the Sea" remarked that since making "The Submarine Eye" he has made long strides in advancing the perfection of his machinery for picturizing under sea work, and with his new methods he is able to give to the patrons of motion picture theatres every thrill created in fiction by Jules Verne.

Select Company South

Republic, But Month Old, Obtains Recognition

The Republic Distributing Corporation has obtained recognition for its product even though it is only four weeks old. This recognition came from the Capitol theatre, New York's newest and the world's greatest theatre devoted to motion pictures.

Beginning Sunday, December 28, for one week the attraction at the Capitol will be Marie Doro in "12:10," Herbert Brenon's super feature which is the Republic Distributing Corporation's first release. Unusual importance is attached to the exhibition of this feature in view of the fact that this is the first six-reel picture ever shown in America, made abroad by an American director with an American star and that it will be first seen in the United States in the largest picture theatre in the world.

Maintaining our policy of obtaining the finest and most popular stories on the market for the exhibitor, we have arranged to produce the world celebrated stories of

Fight on Screen Ads is Warmer

Sidney Cohen Declares Exhibitor Response is Encouraging

HEARTY response on the part of exhibitors on the steps taken by the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of the State of New York to protect the screen from indiscriminate advertising, is indicated in a statement issued by Sydney S. Cohen, President of the League.

"It is clear to me," said Mr. Cohen, "from both the number and the tone of the letters we are receiving that the exhibitors of America are determined to protect their screen.

"I do not say that all advertising on the screen ought to be tabooed, for it is quite possible to bind up entertainment with just a little advertising, but surely we exhibitors ought to be the sole judges of that. We do not want such reckless advertising as now prevails in some sections of the South where they run as much as a thousand feet of purely advertising film at every performance. That sort of practice may or may not benefit the advertiser, but there is no doubt of its injuring the business of the exhibitor. I have been shown a circular issued by a prominent film company soliciting the business of national advertisers.

"This paragraph, I think, is worth quoting and ought to be read by every motion picture theatre owner in the United States. 'Compare,' says this circular, 'an advertisement in a magazine with your picture made by our company. The reader did not buy it with the express purpose of enjoying your ad, but that is precisely what he does when he pays admission to a theatre to see your ad and other pictures made by this company.' The candor of this language is refreshing to put it mildly. Evidently the rights of the exhibitor in the premises have never been considered at all.

"Another flagrant abuse that this organization was formed to fight is the practice of film companies to offer the exhibitor advertising films under the pretense of patriotism or public welfare work: To be specific, one such film pretending to deal with the necessity of observing the rules of the road contained a most pronounced and lengthy pictorial advertisement of an automobile tire company. These methods are getting worse and worse. Some film companies seem to have no scruples and shrink from no deception or trick in forcing advertising on the screen of the exhibitor. The Screen Protection Committee is preparing a vigorous fight against these unscrupulous methods.

"As an evidence of the wide spread character of this movement for the protection of the screen, I want to call your attention to the men who are in this fight. Among them are:

From statements made at the Temporary Headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, it appears that the movement against indiscriminate screen advertising is gaining great headway. The field work of the men who have been sent to get the exhibitors' formal protest against the producer's mortgaging of his screen is especially gratifying in its results. Everywhere they find the same insistence that all industrial and educational films with any advertising admixture be supervised and endorsed by exhibitors before being shown. Several more field men have been sent out this last week. The whole country is being covered thoroughly.

Realart Growth Since Birth Is Notable

THE year just closing has been a momentous one for Realart Pictures Corporation, for during the year its career was started.

Realart's records for the half year of its existence is one of which it is proud. Here it is in Tabloid form as presented by Realart:

Three great stars.

Special productions by two of the best known directors and more to be announced soon.

Initial release breaking attendance records, with a box-office pull which is inspiring scores of messages from exhibitors.

Nearly two million dollars in contracts before a single release.

From an executive force of two men and stenographers on June 15, to present personnel of nearly two hundred.

Home Office covering ten thousand square feet of de luxe Fifth Avenue space.

Twenty-one branches in principal cities, giving an exhibition of team work in selling without precedent.

Outlook for 1920? Well, that's mighty promising. There's a great announcement coming very soon about some new tie-ups that will command the earnest attention of all exhibitors.

"Prosperity, Freedom for All"

Hiram Abrams Forecasts Great Things for Coming Year

HIRAM ABRAMS, United Artists Corporation, has issued the following statement on "the big idea for 1920":

There are two outstanding thoughts that impress me most for the coming year, for exhibitors, distributors, and producers; prosperity and freedom.

Prosperity, because independent producers will present many more bigger and better productions.

Prosperity, because independent producers will market their product on an absolute basis of merit, each picture individually and separately.

Prosperity, because no independent producer will sell any of his product at any price unless the exhibitor will be enabled to make a just and equitable profit.

Prosperity, because we are seeing the passing of the old and intolerable conditions that have been the millstone around the exhibitors' neck.

Prosperity, because the traditions and customs, the practices and methods with which exhibitors have been shackled with, have outlived their usefulness and are about to be cast off.

Prosperity, because there will no longer be room for the antiquated and obsolete methods of distribution which have hindered big stars giving the best in their power.

Prosperity, because the industry will hereafter be run on a basis that means absolute and complete independence for the exhibitor, the producer, the star, in fact the whole industry.

Prosperity, because the sun has set on the days of the program system, that relic of filmdom's dark ages, and its modern substitute, the star series.

Prosperity, because the exhibitor will no longer be compelled to purchase and exhibit the weaker productions so as to be enabled to show the bigger and better pictures.

Prosperity, because the exhibitors will be enabled to run their own affairs in their own way, free from any dictations from those whose business should be to serve them.

Prosperity, because of the large number of independent productions that will be on the market to enable the exhibitor to give his clientele only the best at all times.

Prosperity, because there are coming independent productions of undreamed-of magnitude.

Prosperity, because the dawn of a new era is at hand, which era radiates prosperity, bespeaks prosperity, breathes prosperity.

Freedom, because the exhibitor has had enough of slavery.

Freedom, because the exhibitor has at last realized that there is no reason for him to be a slave to programs, star series, or any of the obsolete methods that have been perpetrated upon him.

Freedom, because they have realized that there is no reason for them to sell an interest in their theatres to monopoly-interests, while the best films in the market are being made by independent producers.

Freedom, because the exhibitor has come to the realization that he cannot be profited an iota by signing long term and exclusive contracts.

Freedom, because it is to the exhibitor's advantage to run his own business in his own way, free from the Simon Legree methods of monopoly interests.

Freedom, because the true exhibitor, the true producer and the true distributor wants the industry to progress and not retrogress.

Freedom, because he wants to be free, to be enabled to enjoy the free things of life, the independence of his country, his home and his business.

Truly, the coming year will bring forth both these things in fullest measure, prosperity and freedom.

Four Hall Releases

Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, announces four new productions for the New Year, three of which productions "High Speed" to be released January 17th; "Chains of Evidence"—January 21st and "A Veiled Marriage"—February 14th are Hallmark productions, releasing on the Famous Directors' Series. The fourth, "Carmen of the North," to be released February 28th, is British American Pictures Finance Corporation's picture, releasing through Hallmark.

"Yankee Doodle" Booking Without the Girls

After establishing a record which will be remembered for some time in the motion picture industry, the Sol Lesser Exchange announces that beginning with the new year, they will book "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," the Mack Sennett travesty without the personal appearance of the Mack Sennett Bathing Girls.

In this Metro group, which has many good reasons just now for Yuletide cheer, are Richard A. Rowland, president; Viola Dana, the dainty star; May Allison, the winsome star; Taylor Holmes, the fun maker; Bert Lytell, the talented; Alice Lake, coming favorite, and Mitchell Lewis

Zena Keefe Promoted to Stardom

It is not often that an actress is asked to make good twice before her name is put in electric lights, but that is what happened to Zena Keefe, Lewis J. Selznick's new star, when she signed a contract to appear in pictures for the Selznick enterprises—and she has succeeded.

When Zena Keefe was engaged by Myron Selznick, he told her he would not star her at once.

"In one year," said Mr. Selznick, "if you have made good, I will star you."

Miss Keefe smiled, accepted the terms, and went to work.

The first of last week, Miss Keefe began work as a star at the Selznick Fort Lee studio in Sophie Irene Loeb's big drama, "The Woman God Sent." Larry Trimble is directing the picture.

"Checkers" in Alaska at Two Dollars Top

"Checkers" has scored emphatically on another "Great White Way." While its Broadway success was big, its success in Alaska is said to have established a new record for that far-away territory. Playing at R. A. Thorne's theatre in Fairbanks, the William Fox production established a record for continuous runs in Alaska, and also for admission prices. Two dollars was charged for the showing of "Checkers" and it ran for an entire week, with daily matinees.

Release Dates Shifted

A change in the releasing dates of Mack Sennett-Keystone comedies is announced by Triangle. "A Lunch Room Romance," a one-reel comedy, will be released on Jan. 4 and "Only a Farmer's Daughter," a two-reel Mack Sennett-Keystone, will be released Jan. 11.

"A Lunch Room Romance" features Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle and Ford Sterling. Louise Fazenda and Charles Murray are the stars of "Only a Farmer's Daughter."

Japanese Star's Best Effort

Hayakawa Believes "The Tong Man" Is Greatest Picture He Has Appeared In

"THE TONG MAN," heralded by motion picture critics as probably the greatest Sessue Hayakawa starring vehicle yet produced, is going like wild fire, according to reports received at the home office of Robertson-Cole. Although this picture was given to the trade two weeks ago, more prints were made necessary by the volume of first run business on this great Chinese melodrama.

A pre-showing of this latest Robertson-Cole release at Loew's New York theatre satisfied the producing company that the critics were right when they acclaimed "The Tong Man" one of the best pictures of the year. So great were the previews of the critics that Robertson-Cole inaugurated a separate advertising and publicity campaign, using their views as a basis.

Every Robertson-Cole Exchange has successfully conducted a special campaign to put this picture over and from the number of bookings already received, all previous Hayakawa records will go by the boards in this latest release. Robertson-Cole records show that more first-run houses than in the past grabbed this great picture, and in many instances so great was the attendance that the picture was held over for several days.

"I am honest in my belief when I say that 'The Tong Man' is the best picture I have ever starred in. The story is truly dramatic and the settings and locals are in keeping with the Chinese touch. I agree with Clyde C. Westover, the author, that the film is in direct keeping with the tense moments of 'The Dragon's Daughter,' the book which was adopted for the screen by Richard Schayer, one of the best known experts on Chinese customs."

The above was the report sent to Robertson-Cole at the preview of "The Tong Man" at the Haworth Studios in California. William Worthington directed the latest Hayakawa success.

Tony Moreno in a New Serial

"Smashing Barriers" Will be Followed by Big New Vitagraph Chapter Picture

THE fifteenth and final chapter of "Smashing Barriers," the Vitagraph serial with William Duncan as the star, has just been released and now the general public will have an opportunity to see the next Vitagraph to-be-continued feature, "The Invisible Hand," with Antonio Moreno as star. During the fifteen weeks that "Smashing Barriers" has been shown, one chapter a week, unsolicited letters have reached Vitagraph it is said, not alone from exhibitors, but from pleased "fans" as well, praising the picture and declaring that it is by all means the best serial yet produced. New bookings continue to pour in for the serial and from present indications it will be months before this play by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady has completed its initial run.

Those who have had a private showing of the first few chapters of the new Antonio Moreno serial, "The Invisible Hand," are confident that it will surpass even "Smashing Barriers" in popularity. It is also the work of Messrs. Smith and Brady. It starts right off with an innovation, giving three reels in the first chapter instead of the customary two, and thus firmly implants the plot of the story "right off the reel." They have taken the Secret Service, with all its ramifications, as the basis of their plot. The hero is the most clever man in the service. He sets his wits against those of a band of notorious crooks.

Screen Ad Evil Hit by Universal

Certain producing companies which manufacture and distribute one reel educational and topical films, according to Hal Hodes, editor of The New Screen Magazine, distributed by Universal, are boasting that they are reaping a harvest from national advertisers who pay big prices for having their products advertised in pictures.

This is not the policy of the Screen Magazine he says, and adds:

"It is unfair to the exhibitor to rent him a picture for which the producer has already been well paid by the advertiser," Mr. Hodes argues: "I consider it very poor business judgment on the part of producers to work camouflage on the exhibitor and the public, for sooner or later they will find out that both are being trimmed. If the public discovers that its favorite theatres are showing pictures which contain thinly disguised advertising propaganda, the next logical step will be the shunning of that theatre."

Alexander Film Corp. in New Offices

The newly formed Alexander Film Corporation, of which William Alexander is President, have taken over the fourth floor of the Leavitt building, 126 W. 46th St., New York City, now being occupied by the Fox Film Corporation, the latter moving to their own building sometime in January. Part of this floor will be used by the Alexander Company for exchange purposes, taking in the Metropolitan district. They will release five specials in February.

W. H. Feature a Hit

W. H. Productions Co. report that their six-reel feature, "The Lost Battalion" now being released on the State Rights market, and which is being handled in the New York state territory by Gardiner Syndicate, is meeting with phenomenal success during its one week engagement at the Van Curler Opera House in Schenectady.

This Universal constellation contains, besides Carl Laemmle, president, Marie Walcamp, Dorothy Phillips, James Corbett, Priscilla Dean, Harry Carey, Robert Anderson, Tsuri Aoki, Eddie Polo, Monroe Salisbury and Mary MacLaren. Universal at this Christmas time is undergoing a season of unusual prosperity

A Year of Selznick Progression

Interests Expanded and New Ones Acquired He Shows in Message

SUMMARIZING the accomplishments of the past year and listing the plans of his various interests for the coming twelve months, Lewis J. Selznick has addressed a statement to the exhibitors of the country. Following holiday greetings to all, he writes:

"The year 1919 is rapidly drawing to a close. It behooves all men to strike a balance and set down in recapitualation in their activities for the past year. To summarize the history of their labors during this period so that what mistakes have been made shall not occur again. 'By your works ye shall be known.' This is to the great army of exhibitor scattered hither and yon, who are the bone and sinew of the industry means—how have you kept your promises made to us so that we in turn may know just how much can be placed on what you tell us in the future?

"Our productions and policies must have had your support as evidenced by the fact that the Selznick Pictures Corporation has accomplished tremendous things during the year of 1919. A brief resume of what we have done during the past twelve months should make it easy for you to visualize what we will do in the months to come. To prepare for the production of pictures of even a higher degree of box-office values, ground has been broken for the largest and most fully equipped cinema studio in the world. New stars have been added to the Selznick roster who have forged to the very foremost ranks among the great artists of the screen. The business and exploitation forces have been doubled. Keen, alert showmen of experience and reputation have materially assisted the exhibitors throughout the country in securing the maximum of patronage for their theatres through the exploitation of Selznick Pictures.

"A national advertising campaign has been started not only covering the important newspapers of United States, but such magazines having tremendous circulation and influence as the Saturday Evening Post, Ladies Home Journal, Pictorial Review, McClure's Magazine, Country Gentleman, Blue Book, Red Book, Green Book, Photoplay Magazine, Motion Picture Magazine, Pictureplay Home Sector, and the American Legion Weekly. In addition to these ad news of publicity, the concentrated drive was made on every newspaper in the United States conducting a motion picture department.

"I extended my own personal activities in the distribution and releasing of pictures during 1919 by forming with Mr. Briton N. Busch, the Republic Distributing Corporation. The Republic Distributing Corporation will distribute Prizma Natural Color Pictures, Kinograms, and features bought from indepndent producers.

"I also formed a partnership with L. Lawrence Weber, this organization to be known as Weber Productions, Inc. Mr. Weber, one of the leading theatre managers of America, is no newcomer to the motion picture field as he introduced Petrova to the screen.

"The National Pictures Theatres, Inc., was also born during 1919 for the purpose of taking the exhibitors of the country into a sustain cooperative partnership with me whereby we are enabled to get together on a profit sharing basis.

"National Picture Theatres, Inc., has met with the endorsement of a huge multitude who have so far signified in no uncertain terms their interest in this enterprise that is theirs' and mine. Firmly believing that there should be cooperation between capital and labor and that labor has certain claims that should be recognized on the same principle, I feel that exhibitors should participate in the profits growing out of the success of productions and their distribution.

"I could not alone, single handed been of service in making your theatres a success. It was your expressions of good wishes made in material form that enabled me to do as much as I have and given me the opportunty to do even more."

Aquatic Venus to Have Her Own Company

Annette Kellermann and her perfect figure have left the legitimate stage and will again be seen in silent drama. She has closed a contract to appear in a series of pictures to be presented by Sol Lesser, well known shadow impressario.

Miss Kellermann will head her own organization, and have full charge of production, including the selection of director, story, and players. It is the intention to make the first Kellermann production even more elaborate than her previous efforts, "The Daughter of The Gods" and "Neptune's Daughter." Mr. Lesser states that the initial production will not cost in excess of $600,000.00. Several months are to be required in staging the play. While the title of the first production is withheld for the time being, it was learned however that a number of scenes will be laid in the Hawaiian Islands. Others will be staged in San Francisco. There is a possibility that the company may go to Australia and New Zealand for some of the locations.

Kleine to Reach All with "Deliverance"

A Christmas present lovers of moving pictures will receive this year in George Kleine's presentation of the famous blind and deaf Helen Keller in the remarkable photo story of her life, entitled "Deliverance." Fully twenty-five companies will be launched by Christmas time and Mr. Kleine has decided to offer it as a popular priced attraction so that every man, woman and child in America can afford to see this picture of "the miracle woman," so often called "the eighth wonder of the world." "Deliverance" is entertained pure and simple with a lot of humorous and human situations as well as some exquisitely beautiful scenes.

Neilan to Guarantee His Output

Sufficient Time to Assure Quality in Productions His Aim

MARSHALL NEILAN, who recently formed his own independent producing organization and who has figured prominently in producer-amalgamation stories during the past few months, last week reviewed his plans for the coming year at his studio in Los Angeles.

"During the year now drawing to a close," said Mr. Neilan, "I have perfected arrangements which clearly indicate that the coming season will be the most important for me since I became affiliated with the industry some nine years ago.

"In 1920 I hope to realize the ambitions and ideals in motion picture production which I have held for a long time. In the formation of Marshall Neilan Productions I attain the basic principles for the fulfillment of these ambitions and for the first time in my career as a director, I will be able to produce pictures as I feel they should be produced.

"The output of my organization cannot at this time be scheduled. Under my plan to make good pictures regardless of any set quantity, such a thing as a detailed release schedule for my year's product is out of the question. I may make eight pictures and I may make two, it all depends upon the results I attain in my work. When one picture is finished, which means it has come up to certain standards, I will start the next and not before. I can state, however, that my pictures will be good attractions both in an artistic way and from the standpoint of the box-office. This is not said with any feeling of egotism. It merely means that I will not release a production unless it reaches a standard at least on par with my best efforts of the past. If it takes me six months to make a good picture, I will be satisfied at the end of that time, that the quality of my production warrants this effort. After all, the returns on one big success, are greater than those on two or three poor ones. So the time consumed in making these poor ones might better be used in carefully putting on one good one.

"I do not guarantee for the coming year, a string of productions and urge the exhibitor to depend upon my product as 'the backbone for his year's business.' Marshall Neilan Productions is one organization that carries out in spirit and to the letter the phrase which so many organizations would like to, but because of overhead, cannot live up to, namely, fewer and better pictures. I will not permit my productions to be sold in a group for I cannot say how the quality of my third release will compare with that of my first. My pictures are booked individually and upon the merit of each will depend the returns. Each picture is handled as a separate institution and each film will stand or fall on its own merit.

"I believe in offering a production on its merits as a production and not for its publicity possibilities. A good production, even if it present a story never heard of, will compel profits. Whereas, past performances have proven, a famous story that is of questionable motion picture value, is a risky investment.

"In keeping with this idea I will not attempt to present films written around stars. First comes the story and then I will obtain the best talent possible to portray my story. This is the only real way of getting the best out of a production.

"During the coming year the producer will occupy a position of strength never before approached. Radical steps will be taken to get his product to the exhibitor without the overhead with which he is now charged for the privilege. The exhibitor and producer will undoubtedly get closer together during the next twelve months than ever before.

"There are various other plans which I have in mind at present which however, are not ready for publication at this time. The coming year will see a general upheaval in the industry which will smash old traditions and systems. Regardless of what happens, quality of production will always reign."

Transfer of Interest in Local Combine

Max Edelhertz of the theatre combination which owns the Hamilton and Oriole in Brooklyn and the Metropolis, Colonial and Wonderland in Manhattan announces that his brother, Bernard Edelhertz has purchased the interest of S. Lazarus. Mr. Lazarus according to the report, no longer has any interest in the combination; either in a financial or managerial way.

Exhibitors Publicize New Drama

Word of Mouth Boosts Spread Word on New Read Production

WORD of mouth advertising, according to the Hodkinson offices, has outstripped producer exploitation in the case of J. Parker Read's special production starring Louise Glaum, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," by Louis Joseph Vance.

For a period of two weeks there was just one positive print of this production available for exhibitor screenings, this being while the duplication of printing was in work in the California laboratories. With the exception of thirty invited exhibitors in Chicago who saw this print one morning while the print broke its journey to New York, not another exhibitor has seen Miss Glaum in this, her latest work for the screen.

And, despite this, according to the Hodkinson statement, the word of mouth praise and discussion of "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" that spread outward in increasing circles from Chicago has caused more than a hundred of the country's biggest exhibitors during the interval of waiting for prints to reach the Hodkinson offices to telegraph the Hodkinson New York home office asking whether the home office print had been received, and whether it could be shipped to this or that big first run to give him an advance screening, with the promise that he would hold open an immediate playing week for the production based on what he had heard about it. To do this was manifestly impossible, but the situation was saved by the prompt arrival of the branch prints in all offices and a resultant series of bookings from the bigger exhibitor groups in the

"The Lone Wolf's Daughter" was booked by exhibitors for such quick playing dates that, it is said, they did not even assure themselves whether the lithographs and accessories would be available in their city for the dates they set. One of the biggest of Middle Western exhibitors brushed this aside by saying he would make his own accessories if necessary from stills, and promptly wired the Hodkinson home offices for a batch of stills to come to him by special delivery. Recognizing the apparent bigness of the production and the urgency of having it introduced to the public with its complete line of unusual accessories, the Hodkinson organization at once caused such premature play dates to be canceled in justice to the picture and the exhibitors seeking to play it.

J. Parker Read, Jr., says the Hodkinson offices have set a hard-to-equal standard of production in this drama that begins amid the grandeur and splendors of Buckingham Palace, takes in the French quarter of Soho in London and plunges its spectators into the depths of mysterious Limehouse and its Chinatown environment with hundreds of Chinese engaged for these scenes.

Louise Glaum, in California and already well underway with her next big production, has enjoyed the unusual experience of receiving letters and telegrams from thirty Hodkinson representatives, the tenor of which messages is: "Watch us establish new records for our offices with 'The Lone Wolf's Daughter.'"

Long Runs on Triangle Re-issues the Rule

Reports from the Triangle exchanges show that first run houses throughout the country are booking for long runs or extra days Triangle recreated releases. These productions, according to the reports, are meeting with instant favor with wide-awake exhibitors, due to the features containing as a rule several stars of recognized box-office value.

"The Flame of the Yukon," a Thos. H. Ince production featuring Dorothy Dalton, the first of the recreated issues being released by Triangle, is receiving first run bookings and longer runs in many of the best houses from coast to coast. Moreover, many of the theatres are working it on percentage and it is proving a rich harvest for their owners. The Liberty theatre, Duluth, and Regent of St. Paul, each ran the picture a full week on percentage, and percentage runs were also given to the Dorothy Dalton feature by many houses with great success.

Mary Miles Minter Wins Praise

Fred Miller Opens Big New Theatre with Realart Star

FRED MILLER picked Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables" to open his New Miller theatre on November 29 after extensive alterations on the theatre had been completed. According to Mr. Miller's report, his expectations for a successful inaugural of the rebuilt picture palace were exceeded. Similar reports of box-office successes are said to have come to Realart from A. G. Talbott, Managing Director of the America theatre, Denver, and from D. W. Maurice of Lafayette, Ind.

Mr. Miller in presenting Miss Minter for the initial presentation at his big theatre gave her production an unusual amount of advance advertising. Billboards throughout the city were papered with "Anne of Green Gables" and Mr. Miller spent a considerable amount in the newspapers.

The result of his efforts is best expressed in his telegram sent to Realart. The message follows:

"Opened my new house with 'Anne of Green Gables' to-day. Business far exceeded expectations, lines extending block each way. Crowds unable to secure admission. People spoke glowingly, congratulating me on this exceptional Realart production. Am particularly elated was fortunate to secure Realart star releases. Mary Miles Minter wonderful. Fred Miller, Miller's New Theatre."

Following the success of "Anne of Green Gables" at the New Miller, the picture was shown in San Francisco and Oakland in conjunction with elaborately exploited personal appearances of the star. San Francisco newspapers, it is stated, opened their columns to the visitor, and on the day before the opening of the picture and prior to Miss Minter's arrival, there had already been printed twelve photographs in five newspapers and a corresponding amount of press matter.

Following her arrival in San Francisco, Miss Minter made a personal appearance at the Turner and Dahnken theatres in Oakland, where her photoplay, "Anne of Green Gables," has been packing the house, according to Manager Perry.

Next day the Realart star was ushered into San Francisco again by the newspaper reports of her activities the previous day in Oakland. Miss Minter's presence in the city and the news of her personal appearance at the Tivoli are reported to have resulted in large patronage at the theatre, according to Mr. Dahnken's report, which follows:

"Despite unfavorable weather Mary Miles Minter in 'Anne of Green Gables' proved excellent drawing card at Tivoli. Wednesday we had constant line-up block long at box-office though it was pouring rain. Consider this remarkable tribute to your little star and her initial Realart production. Congratulations."

Realart officials were equally enthusiastic over the reports which came from Denver and Lafayette. A. G. Talbott, Managing Director of the America theatre, Denver, wired:

"Mary Miles Minter in 'Anne of Green Gables' closed a week's run yesterday. Each day's receipts after Monday larger than on the preceding day. Congratulations."

From D. W. Maurice of Lafayette the following wire was received:

"'Anne of Green Gables' best in years. Mary Miles Minter a dream. Capacity business against Pickford and Fairbanks. When will next Minter be ready. I am strong for Realart if this is sample of your coming pictures."

Special Process to Fore in F. P. Lasky Film

When "Why Change Your Wife?" the latest of the Cecil B. De Mille special productions, reaches the screen the public will be given an opportunity to witness some color work which is said to mark another step forward in the artistic and technical advance of the motion picture.

"Why Change Your Wife?" is in no sense a natural-color production nor does colored photography figure in it. But some unusually beautiful night scenes have been glorified by the addition of hints of color.

The process involved is the special property of the Famous Players- Lasky Corporation.

Eugene O'Brien finished his fourth Selznick picture last week. Its title is "His Wife's Money." Mr. O'Brien's fifth picture has not been selected.

Keenan Lends Personal Aid to Exploitation

Pathe states that Frank Keenan takes an active part in the exploitation of his vehicles. As an instance of the star's interest in publicizing his pictures, Pathe cites a letter which was recently written by Mr. Keenan and addressed to clubs, labor unions, K. of C. councils, universities, and school-superintendents throughout the country. This circular-epistle, couched in language of a most personal tone, called attention to his Pathe release, "Brothers Divided," and expressed his intention of keeping in intimate personal contact with the exhibitors of the country in the exploitation of his pictures.

United Soon Releases "Eternal Mother"

Florence Reed in "The Eternal Mother" will shortly be released by United Picture Theatres of America, President J. A. Berst announces.

The feature was produced by Tribune Productions Incorporated under the direction of Will S. Davis and is from an original story specially written for Miss Reed.

Organization to Produce Short Reel Subjects Only Is Rumored Projected

JOHN JOSEPH HARVEY, director and producer, who is responsible for the production of the Ernest Truex Comedies, is reported to be negotiating with a group of prominent film folk who are about to launch a new film distributing organization to be exclusively devoted to the exploitation of short-reel subjects. The consummation of the plans and the actual inception of the organization, it is said, are being held in abeyance until the reported information that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and others of the larger distributing mediums, will, upon the completion of their present contracts with comedy and other short-reel producers, discontinue releasing one and two-reeled subjects—is confirmed.

Definite information as to who the individuals sponsoring the contemplated organization, are, is not available at this time, although they are known to have been active operators in the state-right field and understood to be in a substantial position to finance the venture. In a general way, the plan is to take over, or contract with an independent exchange in each of the major cities, which exchange will handle only one and two-reel product. In all probability each of these offices will be known as The Comedy Exchange.

The report further indicates, that the promoters are in a position to, and already do control a number of known brands of short-reel productions, and it is not unlikely that Mr. Harvey, who produced the Briggs Comedies—which prior to the expiration of their releasing contract, were released through F. P. L.; and who also produced the Truex Comedies, which have since been suspended on account of Mr. Truex's acceptance of a role in a new place which opens this week in Stamford, Conn.—will either contract to produce two-reel comedies for the new organization, or to acquire the product of other short-reel producers for release by them, or both.

Lasky Studio Six Years Old

From Small Beginning Western Plant Has Developed to Great Proportions

AS an example of the consistent growth of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation west coast studio in Hollywood, it is interesting to recall that it was just six years ago December 6, that Cecil B. De Mille and Fred Kley, (the latter now studio manager) left New York for Hollywood, California, to start the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company studio. The organization had been perfected in New York with Mr. Lasky, who came west shortly afterward.

The studio then consisted, when actually in existence, of one building which contained beside the executive offices, the carpenter shop, dressing rooms, scene painters' dock and property room. There was a stage measuring 22 x 35 feet.

The present Director General, Cecil B. De Mille, with Mr. Kley, arrived in Los Angeles December 11th. On December 29th the first scene was shot for the first Lasky production, "The Squaw Man." Only recently Mr. De Mille again produced this picture and comparisons between the two evidenced the growth of the industry in the matter of detail and investiture.

Several months later, William De Mille, brother of C. B. De Mille, arrived to do scenario work. He had a small office built and was afterward transferred from one new structure to another until the present scenario row was constructed and his picturesque office and study built.

To-day the studio covers two square blocks; it represents an investment in buildings, land and equipment of probably more than a million and a half of dollars. In addition there is the Morosco studio on Occidental boulevard.

The Lasky studio is devoted to Paramount-Artcraft pictures with eight or nine companies working and a vast force of people employed. Thus does time bring changes in this fifth largest industry.

Many Aids on "Eve in Exile"

American Special Has Attractive Line of Posters; Practical Suggestions Too

POSTERS that show exceptionally skillful designing with an eye to the demands of exhibitors and the psychology of picturegoers, are those composing the series issued by the American Film Company in conjunction with Pathe for its new "Flying A" Special, "Eve in Exile."

These include a one-sheet which gains favor not only because it is striking, but because it presents the two lovers in a pleasing pose that manages to get over their sentimental interest in each other without resorting to the ancient and hackneyed device of the "clinch."

There are two three sheets, one a full-length portrait of Charlotte Walker, the other a still of the horse-whipping scene, with Thomas Santschi, Violet Palmer and Miss Walker making up the group.

The six-sheet shows the star defying Thomas Santschi as he towers above her on horseback, and the twenty-four-sheet is a clever play of the artist's brush upon the Garden of Eden theme suggested by the title of the film. One of the poster series is reproduced herewith.

Among the practical suggestions offered to the exhibitor for properly exploiting the film is a street stunt staged with the help of a pretty girl, a rube and a ramshackle auto loaded to the final inch with the bags, trunks and hat-boxes which Eve carries with her into exile. The auto displays a placard with a teasing advertising.

For theatres that go in for special presentation, the Campaign Book outlines an allegorical prologue that is effective and artistic, and at the same time fairly simple and inexpensive to put across.

The Campaign Book is accompanied by a special Press Sheet.

Due to a mistaken impression that "Sky-Eye," the sensational aviation picture being distributed by Sol Lesser is a serial, the organization takes this means of stating that it is a feature production in six reels.

Work on the forthcoming Arthur F. Beck serial "The Isle of Jewels" has been completed.

June Elvidge whose contract with World will shortly be completed, has signed with Mayflower Pictures Corp.

Barnhard Boosts Short Drama

Capital's President Sees Increasing Demand for Two Reelers with a Story

THE pronounced demand which is reported increasing in volume, for high-class two-reel dramas and other "short stuff" of real quality is interestedly dealt with by S. L. Barnhard, president of the Capital Film Company, in a statement issued last week on the policy of his concern.

"We have three companies working at present," said Mr. Barnhard, "the schedule of production calls for 24 pictures a year from each company, or an average of two a month, and we have had to speed up this schedule in order to keep pace with releasing demands.

"There is no chance, according to exhibitors and producers, that the short productions will entirely supersede the features of five or six reels in length. But it is practically certain that the 'padded' features must go.

"Taking the entire production output of five-reel feature pictures, there seems to be no doubt that at least 25 per cent. of these lack sufficient theme power to warrant the five reels of footage. As two-reelers, these pictures would 'get across,' whereas in five reels they become draggy and monotonous.

"With theatres all over the country asking for two-reel dramas, producers will scrutinize more carefully than ever the stories submitted for feature length production. And, unless these stories measure up to feature requirements, the tendency will be to turn them out in two reels instead of five.

On the West Coast

At the Ince Plant

The first official confirmation of the recent report that the Associated Producers have completed their organization, was sent out this week from the Ince studio, in which it was stated that Thomas H. Ince had been elected general manager, and Mack Sennett, treasurer. Official information is also given of the reported name of the organization which is to be "The Associated Producers." In speaking of the participants in the formation, the name of George Loane Tucker was included with those of Messrs. Ince, Sennett, Neilan, Dwan and Tourneur.

The statement closes with the terse remark: "The object of the organization is to eliminate the middleman in distribution." The rentals on combined productions are said to represent a total of twenty millions annually.

The most recent produced Charles Ray picture has come from the Ince editing rooms with a new title of "A Village Sleuth," this having been substituted for "Watch Out William." Ray, under the direction of Jerome Storm, is now filming "Homer Comes Home," and for this production a back east small town street has been built at the studio.

Director Fred Niblo has begun the filming of "The Man in the Moon," which will be a starring vehicle for Enid Bennett. Miss Bennett has been on a vacation for the past several weeks, while Director Niblo was loaned for the making of another picture starring Louise Glaum, by the J. Parker Reed, Jr., organization.

Irvin Willat, with the Hobart Bosworth Company, is still at Catalina Islands, and it will take at least another week to make the under-sea scenes for "Below the Surface." Willat has established cutting rooms at the island, and is editing the picture when the weather conditions are not satisfactory for filming.

Two or three scenes needed for "Let's Be Fashionable," the coming Douglas MacLean-Doris May Ince pictures, require that the entire company spend several days at Catalina Islands. The scenes required cause the company to photograph these on several locations to be found only on the island.

Vitagraph News Bits

Desirable settings for the O. Henry story, "An Afternoon Miracle," have been found in the vicinity of Tia Juana, Mexico, and Director Dave Smith went to that place this week with the Vitagraph Company for the filming of exteriors for this play. Jay Morley and Virginia Nightingale have been cast in the leading roles for this picture.

Gene Paige has been selected by President Albert E. Smith as leading woman for the Black Soviet serial, which will feature Joe Ryan. Miss Paige arrived from the east this week and it is expected production will be started within a few days.

Montgomery and Rock have completed the filming of a comedy which has been titled "Knights and Nighties," and are now at work on another subject. On another stage, Director Noel Smith is filming interiors for a comedy featuring Jimmy Aubrey, many of the scenes for which are laid in a New York department store. Big interior store settings have been prepared for this.

President Albert E. Smith has departed for New York, after spending several weeks at the Hollywood studios. While here he supervised making of plans for enlarging the producing plant and also consummated contracts with William Duncan and Larry Semon.

Fox Studio Doings

For the first time in several weeks, every producing unit of the Fox studio is now busy on new productions. Those to assume activity during the past week are headed by Gladys Brockwell and Madlaine Traverse.

The complete cast for the initial Shirley Mason release, "Her Elephant Man," which has Albert Roscoe as leading man, includes Harry Todd, Henry J. Hebert, and Miss Ardito Mellonino.

Miss Madlaine Traverse will have "The Penalty" as her next picture, which is an adaptation from the Henry Clifford Colwell novel of the same name, and affords the star an intensely emotional and dramatic role. Howard M. Mitchell is in charge of directing this picture and has as the cast, Howard Scott as leading man, Jack Rollens, Juvenile, and supporting players are Ben Deely, Edwin Booth Tilton, Genevieve Blimm, Elinor Hancock and Correan Girkham.

A modernization of the Charles Reed novel, "White Lies," is to be Gladys Brockwell's vehicle. EDWARD J. LE SAINT (please use caps on this name for he says I never mention him) began the filming of this picture this week. William Scott is leading man, and an exceptional array of talent, including Josephine Crowell, Violet Schram, Eddins Kirk, Charles K. French, Howard Scott and Lule Warrenton have been engaged to take the principal roles.

In addition to Margaret Loomis, who plays the lead opposite Tom Mix in "3 Gold Coins," Director Cliff Smith has a cast composed of Frank Whitsom, Bert Hadley, Dick Rush, Margaret Cullington, Sylvia Jocelyn, Bonnie Hill, Syd Jordan, Walt Robbins and Frank Weed at work in this western picture at Mixville, the William Fox western ranch.

Universal Newsettes

Universal producing units are one by one resuming activities at the studios after three or four weeks between pictures, three new subjects being put into production this week. It has been decided the next James J. Corbett picture will be "Kentucky Jim," adapted from the stage success, "Pals," by Edmund Day. Jack Ford, who directed the previous Corbett picture, and who has just returned from a vacation spent in New York, will be in charge of making this play. This play will give Corbett opportunity to use his educated fists.

Complete cast was selected and the work of filming was begun on the subject, "The Primrose Path," a novel of the same name by Bayard Veillers, by Director Christy Cabanne. Supporting Frank Mayo and Josephine Hill are Mae Busch, Rudd Christians and Beatrice Burnham. Lynn Reynolds is working with Harry Carey and the scenario staff in preparing the continuity for "Alias Whispering White," and the first work of filming this was started this week.

Work of filming "The Moonriders," by Director Reeves Eason, has been delayed because of the illness of the featured player, Art Accord, and Eason is now busy with the making of a two-reel subject entitled, "Back From the Dead."

Virginia Brown, who has been engaged by President Carl Laemmle under a five years' contract, after winning the Fame and Fortune popularity contest conducted by a national screen magazine, has arrived at Universal City and will be cast shortly in her first part.

George Hively, who went to Japan with Henry MacRae to write continuity for "The Petals of LacTez," has returned to Universal City and resumed work in the scenario department there. Owing to illness, Mr. Hively was forced to give up his work in the Orient.

Complete cast for the remaining episodes of the Eddie Polo serial, "The Vanishing Dagger," has been given out by Director Jacques Jaccard, the list including Thelma Percy, Ray Ripley, Laura Oakley, Ruth Royce, Charles Brindley and others. Upon completing the ten episodes, this company will sail for South America to film the remaining eight releases.

A panorama of Paris including the Eifel Tower has been constructed at Ucity for scenes in Von Stroheim's "The Woman in the Plot." Reports are that special electrical appliances were needed to light the big set.

About Metro Players

The second series of Screen Classics have all been completed at the Metro studios and all necessary arrangements have been completed for filming the third series and productions work is being started by all of the several companies.

The second Druy Lane subject of the six to be made was put into production this week under the direction of Herbert Blache. This is "The Hope," and the players selected for leading roles are Jack Mulhall, Ruth Stonehouse and Frank Elliot. Blache has just finished filming of "The Walk-Offs," with May Allison and previous to this directed Madame Nazimova in "Stronger Than Death," and "The Brat."

Everything is in readiness for the filming of "Shore Acres," which will be made under the direction of Rex Ingram and will be Alice Lake's second starring vehicle. Edward Connelly, who for five years played the role of Uncle Nat Berry in the original stage company, will play this role in support of Miss Lake. This will be Rex Ingram's first picture for Metro. Previous to his entrance in the army he made Bluebirds and since his return has filmed one feature at Universal City. Sets now built for this production include a number of interiors at the studio and a big village street at old Universal ranch north of Hollywood. The company will spend a greater portion of the time necessary for production at location near the sea.

Arthur D. Ripley, former film editor at Kalem and Fox studios, who has served at the Metro for the past year in this capacity, is to be the director of the next Bert Lytell Screen Classic, "Alias Jimmy Valentine." The Lytell company has just finished the filming of "The Right of Way," for which scenes were made at Monterey, Cal. The cast for the new Lytell picture has not been announced but plans have been made for the beginning of filming the first of the coming week.

A complete two-story dwelling has been built on one of the Metro stages for scenes in "Old Lady 31," which in itself is an innovation. In production it is customary where there are two floors to a building and action takes place in both, to build them separately on the floor of the stage, but Production Manager, Maxwell Karger has stepped away from the usual, believing that Emma Dunn and Henry Harmon, leads of this picture who played in the stage production, will get into the spirit of the production more if they work from one scene into the next as the two story dwelling will make possible.

The F.P.-Lasky Studio

Clyde Fillmore, who has played leads in a number of west coast made subjects (and at the same time serving as leading man in the stage production of "Civilian Clothes" during its remarkable twenty-four weeks run in Los Angeles, at the Morosco Theatre) has been placed under contract by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, for a period of four years, according to announcement made by Jesse L. Lasky. The Fillmore contract becomes effective with the expiration of Mr. Fillmore's engagement with the Morosco Company, but in the mean time, he will play leads opposite Mary Miles Minter in her third Realart subject "Nurse Margery." Fillmore is a giant and considered one of the best actors to appear on Los Angeles stages in many months. He was sought by a number of the different producing organizations here and his acceptance of the Famous Players-Lasky terms means this organization has secured the most popular favorite of Los Angeles' most popular stock company.

Another announcement made by Mr. Lasky this week is, to the effect that George H. Melford in the future will make special Paramount-Artcraft productions. He has just completed the filming of the "Sea Wolf," and it is now arranged that his next subject, which will be his first special, will be an adaptation from the Edmund Day stage play, "The Roundup." Work on this will probably not be started for several weeks, in order that all necessary preparations can be made before scenes are taken.

"Terror Island" has been completed under the direction of James Cruze and Houdini, the star, has departed for New York. From there Mr. Houdini will leave almost immediately for a tour of the world.

But a few scenes remain for Director Walter Edwards to make for the Ethel Clayton play, "The Young Mrs. Winthrop," and following this, this director will film "All in a Night" with the same star. The other players for this subject have not been named.

Director Charles Maigne and Conrad Nagle, leading man, will arrive the latter part of this week for the filming of "The Fighting Chance," adapted from the Robert W. Chambers play. As previously announced, Anna Q. Nilsson will play the feminine lead.

The Famous-Players Lasky Technical Staff is now engaged in preparing settings for the film version of William Gillette's drama, "Held By the Enemy," and the filming will be started within the next ten days by Director Donald Crisp. Crisp has just finished filming "The Six Best Cellars," starring Bryant Washburn, and that star is now working under the direction of James Cruze in "Where Julia Rules."

The day before Christmas has been selected by William C. De Mille for the first filming of "The Prince Chap." The selection of this date was not because of any superstition on the part of William C. DeMille, but because the technical staff of the studio could not prepare necessary settings, prior to that time. Tom Meighan will be the featured player of this, the first special Paramount-Artcraft production filmed by William C. DeMille.

Christie Activities

A number of additions have been added to the producing staff at the Christie studios by General Manager C. H. Christie, and Al Christie who is supervising the several companies now making Christie one and two reel comedies.

Frederic Sullivan became a member of this staff and will serve as director together with Scott Sidney, William Beaudine and others. Sullivan began directing for the Reliance Company a number of years ago, and since directed four years for Thanhouser. For a time he was identified with exhibiting pictures, and conducted theatres through the Central West.

Allen Watt, late of the U. S. Army, has been engaged in the capacity of assistant director, and will work under the supervision of Al E. Christie.

Molly Malone, who has been playing with Roscoe Arbuckle in Paramount comedies for the past six months, has been engaged by Supreme Comedies, and will be featured in a series to be released through Robertson-Cole. James Liddy is to be the male lead of this company.

Here and There

The new Bessie Love Company recently announced, is to begin production early in 1920, according to announcement this week. Plays have been selected for a series starring Miss Love, but no statement has been made as to the release, director, or what studio will be used.

The film recently made under the direction of Lloyd B. Carleton titled "The Amazing Woman," and featuring Ruth Clifford, will shortly be ready for release. The film is a melodrama, and those who have seen editing runs predict it will be a box office winner.

With "The River's End," the first Neilan Production practically finished, arangements are being made at the studio on Allesandro Street for the filming of his next play. Matt Moore has been engaged by Producer Neilan for the leading part, and has arrived in Los Angeles. Margery Daw will play the feminine lead. Betty Bouton, a protege of Neilan's who has played in a number of coast pictures, will also be cast for a leading part in the coming film.

Dave Kisson, who has served as cameraman for Famous Players-Lasky and other west coast companies, has been engaged as cameraman for the Neilan company.

By the end of the week William S. Hart will have completed all scenes for the second production of his present contract, which is at present known as "By Their Fruits Ye Shall Know Them." Mr. Hart and his Director, Lambert Hillyer, are joint authors of this play, and will have Anna Q. Nilsson as leading woman; Joseph Singleton, heavy; and character roles taken by Jack Richardson and Billy Elmer. A greater portion of the film is now in the hands of the editor, Roy Stone, and the subject will be ready for the laboratories within two weeks.

The Brentwood Film Corporation has selected the title of "Seeing It Through" as the permanent one for the first subject made for this company by Director Claude H. Mitchell, under the working title of "Where There's a Will—." This subject will shortly be offered through Robertson-Cole.

Now that General Manager Harry Rapp, of the western Selznick organization, has "Just A Wife" well under way, he is giving his attention to the next production which is to be filmed. This is a screen adaptation of "Blind Youth," from the play of the same name by Willard Mack and Lou Tellegen. Kathlyn Williams, Beatrice Joy, and Roy Stewart are the principals of "Just a Wife," which is being directed by Howard Hickman.

Edwin Carewe, who recently came west for the filming of a series of pictures to be released through Pathe, has returned from Topock, Arizona, where with the aid of more than one hundred people, he filmed the necessary river scenes along the Colorado River for "Rio Grande." Producer Carewe has selected the entire cast which includes Rosemary Theby, Allan Sears, Hector Sarno, Arthur Carew, Sam Appel, Adele Farington and the two well known child players.

George Hively couldn't stand the Cherry Blossom climate of Japan, so he's back at U City. He left the Henry McRae Company flat as far as we know.

Lynn Reynolds we learn this week, had brushed the dust off of his faithful Underwood, and was writing pieces for the screen which he will direct.

Frank Lloyd is directing "The Woman in Room 13," which cost the word "epochal."

Goldwyn $35,000 (so the P. A. said), and Frank goes at it like he was making a story he wrote himself.

Al St. John claims he got into the movies by accident because he could swim and dive, and thereby double for Mabel Normand in water stunts, but he urges everyone else to stay out of the movies.

Jack Reid, who speaks Castilian Spanish, yes, fluently, had the time of his young life when Lerdo's Royal Mexican band were his guests. Some claim he invited them out to polish his Spanish. Others said he would now be as popular as if he had entertained a German band.

The other day we read that George Loane's "Miracle Man" would total two and a half million in bookings, and now comes the statement that all the productions of Ince, Sennett, Tucker, Neilan, Dwan and Tourneur, will aggregate twenty million annually, which makes us believe that one of the statements is not correct; but what difference does it make whether its twenty, thirty, or forty or fifty million. The film industry is accustomed to speaking with large sums.

Bert Lytell suggests the following as a course of study for young men who wish to become motion picture publicity agents:

Start with Grimm and Hans Christian Andersen.

Attend Sunday School and learn about Jonah, et al.

In High School read Homer and The Thousand and One Nights, and practice Spanish athletics.

Become summer resort correspondent for a big city daily.

Get married, stay out nights, and keep Wifie contented.

Then accept a position as pufflicist.

PUTTIES!

We, speaking editorially, have heard many discussions as to who originated putties as a proper part of a director's garb during working hours, and to get at a conclusion as to who is responsible for the extravagance of buying horse-hide and pig-skins to bind one's calves and ankles while walking about a dust proof stage, or amid the sagebrush and grease wood of our foothills, HOKUM has been besieged with requests to conduct a searching investigation, and therefore, in a coming issue, will throw its columns open that all interested may say just what they know to aid an infant industry in learning the why and wherefore of putties.

Such a discussion will be very valuable.

When first considering this addition to the publication, it was determined the price of the publication should be increased because of the value added thereby, but gentle readers, you are to have a treat, and HOKUM remains the only think that has not increased in price in these days of the h. c. of l.

This is not an advertisement for the leather trust, but HOKUM hopes to do its part to reduce an unnecessary waste in this industry of fancy an infancy.

Pictures Rank With Print Press

A scene from the Blackton-Pathe Picture, "My Husband's Other Wife"

Louis Burston Believes Invention Is Secondary Only to Press

NOT all the true lovers of the art of the silent drama and the wonders of the silver screen are to be found in the general classification commonly known as fans. Exhibitors who let their attention wander from the box-office long enough to watch the succession of pictures which they present to their patrons will tell you that there is a band of devotees of the screen who week by week, year by year, are aiming to develop the possibilities of animated photography to the very fullest extent that may serve to make clearer the visualization of ideas. A notable example is Louis Burston, President of Burston Films, Inc., who has just announced the presentation of a fifteen episode serial, "The Hawk's Trail," with King Baggot in the name part and a support of twelve star principals headed by Rhea Mitchell and Grace Darmond.

Louis Burston said in a recent interview: "We may be said to be out of the motion picture kindergarten, but we are still in the primary grades in the making of motion pictures; we still have the high school and the college courses ahead of us, to say nothing of a post-graduate course and special research work. And if any of your readers think that is too broad a statement, I will go even further and say that to my mind and to that of any other serious students of the subject the motion picture is the greatest invention for the civilization and advancement of the earth's peoples since the advent of the printing press.

"In the second episode of 'The Hawk's Trail,' there is a situation which I do not believe could be successfully presented to the average reader by the most skillful novelist. Despairing of getting rid of a ward whose fortune he covets, one of the characters, a man of strong mind and mesmeric powers, hypnotises his own son into attempting the ward's life. To attempt to describe in words a situation so nearly bordering upon the unbelievable, and one so far outside our everyday experiences, would be futile indeed, but by the most unusual employment of triple exposures we have succeeded in presenting the situation in the most convincing manner. "Seeing is Believing," you know. Powerful as the effects of these scenes are, the means employed are really very simple, and that is one reason why I say that we are only beginning to know and make use of the almost limitless possibilities of the motion picture camera.

"Throughout the picture I have utilized camera effects for the dissection, analysis and presentation of the workings of the minds of certain of the characters, and too, I have used close-ups more effectively than is usual. For instance, that fine actor, George Seigman, who appeared in Griffith's "Hearts of the World," has the character of a high-caste Chinaman. In one scene he plays with nearly a score of real Chinamen, and the test for characterization is a particularly severe one. When we were filming this scene someone remarked that George was "getting away with it in great shape." Frankly, things had been going so smoothly I hadn't thought of the possibility of an audience making comparisons between the real and the simulated Oriental, and I wondered if there was such a possibility. So I conceived the idea of making the camera tell me the truth, and instructed the cameraman to get a close-up of George so large that only a part of his face would show on the screen.

The result was simply marvelous. The coarse hair of George's mandarin moustache, the slanted eyes with the full upper lid, even the large pores in the skin of the nose so frequently found in Eastern peoples, is shown on the screen as if made by micro-photography.

"And so I repeat that only the close student of human nature and the untiring researcher into motion picture possibilities can hope to keep up with its glorious art and bent its limitlessness to his own purposes."

B. A. Rolfe Signed by Jans Pictures

Following the most important announcement of last week in which H. F. Jans of Jans Pictures, Inc., gave out details of the company's plans and intentions, comes word that the first director to be signed by the new producing corporation is B. A. Rolfe.

The announcement of Mr. Rolfe's name, however, is not the only news that Jans Pictures, Inc., will have to tell the exhibitors for in the very near future the names of stars and plays will be forthcoming as well as the names of additional directors. In making the twelve features a year the Jans people intend to produce not one or two unusual pictures but twelve out of the ordinary features annually, twelve features that will place the concern at the topmost rung of the ladder of successful producers.

Under the general management of H. F. Jans the company is going ahead rapidly with its pretentious plans and will make further announcements of vital interest to the entire industry in a very short time.

Town of 100; Rental of $100 Paid; How?

As an evidence of the enterprise displayed by exhibitors in small towns and which discloses the fact that all the showmen in the motion picture business are not located in large cities, it is only necessary to call attention to H. A. Arnold, manager of the Colonial theatre of Coalfax, Ill.

Coalfax has a total population in the neighborhood of 100. Mr. Arnold does not sit in his theatre waiting for the hundred to come to his house. He goes out after people in the surrounding community. To get them there he does unusual things. His latest stunt was to pay Select Pictures $100.00 for one day for Elsie Janis in "A Regular Girl."

This in itself marks a record breaking price for a community the size of Mr. Arnold's domain. That he made money was evidenced by a telegram received in the offices of Select Pictures Corporation, in which Mr. Arnold asked if they had any more $100 pictures; that was the kind he wanted, as they drew crowds.

Release Strength Is Maintained

F. P.-Lasky Announce Two More Big Pictures

THOMAS H. INCE comes to the front with what is described as a startlingly sensational film drama in "Behind the Door," which was released on the Paramount-Artcraft schedule December 14. At least, this is the statement of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which is releasing the production as a special and is backing it with a campaign of advertising which reflects confidence in the manner of its reception by the public.

Released on the same date under the same auspices is the Cosmopolitan production, "The Cinema Murder," with Marion Davies, based on the story by E. Phillips Oppenheim.

Hobart Bosworth, who, though he has been long absent from the screen, is nevertheless well remembered for his contributions to the art as actor and producer, comes back as a star in "Behind the Door," which was personally supervised in all its details by Mr. Ince. To those who recall the quality of his previous work it may be said, Famous Players-Lasky states, that Mr. Bosworth has lost none of his charm.

Gouverneur Morris wrote "Behind the Door" and it created much comment among fiction readers when it appeared in McClure's Magazine a little over a year ago. Luther Reed adapted it for the screen and Irvin Willat directed.

Jane Novak plays opposite Mr. Bosworth and Wallace Beery has the role of the villain who pays in the end. Others in the support are James Gordon, Dick Wain, J. P. Lockney, Gibson Goland and Otto Hoffman. The photography is declared to be exceptional, especially the marine scenes, and earn just praise for the cameraman, J. C. Taylor.

"The Cinema Murder" is a mystery which appeared in the Cosmoplitan Magazine. Marion Davies is cast as an actress of great promise who nearly comes under the domination of an unscrupulous financier. She is saved by her love for a young playwright, who is himself under suspicion for the supposed murder of his cousin.

Guy Croswell Smith, President of Guy Croswell Smith Co., Ltd.

One of the feature scenes in the film is a play within a picture—showing a performance of the spoken drama on the screen, in which Miss Davies as the star scores a tremendous hit. This episode is said to be really a remarkable example of motion picture realism. The fashionably clad audience, back-stage properties and the performance behind the footlights are all declared to be faithful in detail. Of course, Miss Davies, who mounted to stardom via the musical comedy and revue stage, is thoroughly at home in the role of the leading lady and her work in this particular part of the picture is all that could be desired.

George D. Baker directed the picture and playing opposite Miss Davies is Nigel Barrie. Others in the cast are Reginald Barlow, Anders Randolf, Peggy Parr, Eulalie Jensen and W. Scott Moore.

Fox House Enlarged

A further extension of the big new theatre which William Fox is to build in the Bronx was announced last week by A. S. Kempner, real estate representative of the Fox Theatrical Enterprises. Under the latest plans the theatre will have a seating capacity of 4,500. The structure will be used as an office building.

Another point which illustrates the constantly growing magnitude of the Fox enterprises, is that the new Fox Terminal Theatre, Newark, with a seating capacity of 3,400, will be opened to the public next Saturday evening.

Leadership

The "NEWS," this year, has carried several hundred more pages of paid advertising than its nearest competitor (exact figures next week).

The "NEWS" subscription circulation (handpicked, from the trade only) jumping fast toward 10,000, is already 9,216.

The "NEWS" serves this industry further by serving the newspapers. In conjunction with the Studio Directory the "NEWS" reaches 8,843,560 of the public through 315 newspapers in 129 cities.

The "NEWS" reaches a selected group of 692 buyers and largest theatre owners in 35 foreign countries and stands highest in the foreign field.

Some reasons why—

The NEWS Covers the Field

In The Export Field

An Hour for Clear Thought

OPENING up a vista of undreamed opportunity, throwing wide the door to a score of lands which had for four years been closed markets, and unleashing the stifled amusement loving proclivities of peoples whose one routine of life had been War for a similar period, the armistice more than a year ago stunned the American producer and exporter with the golden chance which apparently loomed unfailingly ahead.

A year has passed—and the gilded goal still lies ahead. The mantle of prosperity has not carelessly fallen on the shoulders of the big and little exporters. The producer has found his calculation slightly awry upon figuring he could expend a few extra thousands, or a score of thousands of dollars upon a production and have the sum transferred to the credit side of the ledger two fold by fairy like disposition of the foreign wand.

The figurative line-up of film men seeking passports to far shores has diminished in proportion. A clarity of view has taken the place of hasty, exuberant calculations. And as a result, while optimism still prevails as to the future of our export business in pictures, it is an optimism founded not on ephemeral figures, here-say conditions abroad, but rather on solid business reasoning and principles.

It isn't that there has not been an increase in business, for there has been. But the Deluge of business expected has not been forthcoming—and there is the rub to the soul of the producer and exporter.

South American countries are taking our productions in even greater volume than during the war, which period really established our product there. To Australia, Newfoundland and Labrador also has gone greater footage, of greater value. But to the United Kingdom, France, Italy, Canada and other countries there has gone forth less of our product than in 1918.

Some Interesting Figures

ALTOGETHER there has been a greater export business done than in 1918, but the amount does not approach that done in pre-war days—not by some 60,000,000 feet of film, or 2,000,000 of dollars so far as unexposed film goes. The difference in footage and dollar figures between the years 1916 and 1919 is approximately the same for exposed film.

The fact that this country has not ratified the Peace Treaty is primarily blamed by picture men for the poor export showing this year—poor in comparison to what was expected.

Carrying in its wake generally unsettled and disturbed industrial conditions, it has forced the exchange rate of foreign moneys to such a low point that it is suicidal for the French, Italian or English film man to invest to any extent in American pictures. This low exchange rate forces the Frenchman to pay approximately $2.20 for one dollar's worth of American film, the Italian to pay about $3.00 for one dollar's worth and the English to give roughly $5.00 for every four dollars' worth of negative brought in

It is hardly to be wondered at then, that our exporters are facing a period where business is at a standstill. Nor is that the only reason for the dropping off in our foreign business, though it undoubtedly is the main one.

While with the armistice all Europe was reported to be starting off on an amusement-mad tangent, as a matter of fact the joy at a return to peace conditions was necessarily indulged in by the majority only in spirit. Contrary to popular beliefs the French did not drop the cares brought on by the devastating struggle and take up an immediate search for its accustomed light spirited regime. Reconstruction occupies, and will continue to occupy the people for years to come. The silver francs still hoarded were not brought forth to be fed into the maws of theatres, picture houses, etc. Rather are they being used to restore so far as may be restored, the France of five years ago. Heavy government and departmental taxes on theatre admissions still in effect, tend to keep down any untoward surge of the populance to such spending. The casual Paris visitor will see money floating into theatre box office in streams, but may not consider that it is not all from the pockets of the natives—nor that Paris does not by a vast section of territory, represent all of France.

The Continent in Review

In England conditions are better. The exchange rate is not so low. The war has not affected the country as it did France. But film men returning from England, and correspondents throughout Great Britain give messages which indicate the American film industry has strong grounds for the belief that it is in for a battle to maintain the foothold already gained throughout the British Isles for its product.

France and English film production was negligible throughout the war. Millions will be spent and untold effort expended in these countries to bring their own product to a standard where it will compete with the best we can offer. The supremacy that American productions have held and still hold will be strongly assailed. Italy, which has an embargo against American films, is according to observers, fast resuming picture production along up-to-date lines.

So far as Germany and Austria are concerned, the fact that the Peace Treaty has not as yet been ratified makes but little difference. Germany has placed an embargo against importation of American films. She will without doubt continue the measure in force in protection of her own business. Home made films have had full sway during the war and since in Germany. They had made considerable inroad into surrounding countries, notably Holland. Even if the ban is removed, it must be taken into consideration that the American output for four years has not entered Germany, and that the films that would be rushed to that country would create a drugged market. It is estimated the back film product would usurp the German market for over two years to the exclusion of all else. Under the circumstances little can be expected at present from that country's trade.

There's Still Some "Junk"

Just as detrimental to the business of the well meaning producer is the fact that plaints

Echoes from the Foreign Market

¶ The American producer and exporter must face the fact that supremacy in the foreign market may not be held without effort.

¶ Prohibitive Exchange rates in France, Italy and England, embargoes by Germany and Italy, seething and unsettled conditions in other European countries, and distrust in the Far East and to a lesser degree in the South American republics occasioned by the dumping of old and poor films at big prices, have all conspired to materially unsettle the market.

¶ A current of competition has settled in abroad with the industry again booming following non-production during the war and will force American producers to offer their best wares for consumption.

¶ Exports in 1919, far from reaching the high figures fondly hoped for at the beginning of the year, are considerably below the amounts reached in 1917, and but little better than in 1918.

¶ The chance of the American producer and exporter is still as bright as ever it was, but must be sought and grasped in a sound, businesslike way.

Conditions Pictured by News Readers

MOTION PICTURE NEWS readers throughout the world have contributed the following letters containing suggestions, criticisms, constructive hints and other valuable and interesting information of the motion picture industry, as they see it, far removed from this country.

They are presented with as few changes in text and construction possible, with the idea that the text as written by the correspondents contains first hand data and facts of conditions in their respective countries which will prove of interest and value to American exporters and producers.

The NEWS family is scattered throughout practically the entire world, and letters are received from many other countries than space permits us to represent on these pages.

England

"Mediocre Pictures Never Leave Renters' Shelves"

I HAVE been a subscriber to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS for some time, as you are probably aware, and have found your valuable journal a great aid to me in my business. It is surely a good thing to see how the pictures we shall eventually book are going over in America, and whilst all the pictures that prove big successes with you don't always break records here, one can generally get a good idea what will turn out a money getter and accordingly look out for same, when released in England.

I like American pictures, most of them. At present they are the best, and there is nothing beats the best. Of the 104 pictures (features) we have booked for this year, 38 are British and 66 American. These latter include the Goldwyn output, Paramount-Artcraft, Triangle, Pathe, etc. We have also run every Pathe serial up to date. Of course, we have about four producing firms in England capable of putting out pictures that are not a long way from equalling the best of the American productions. Some of these have even greater drawing power than the American, owing probably to some known English star being in the cast or from the fact they are adaptations from some popular novel.

There appears to be something like an overproduction of pictures in America, the mediocre ones of this category coming over here to lay on the shelves of renting firms. I think the cry is for fewer pictures and even better, so that nearly all productions will get the maximum bookings out of the 5,000 picture houses in England.

A question: Why are American projectors sold over there at $250 not to be purchased here for less than $650?

A Word of Warning—Cater to the British Taste

YOU ask for our opinions upon American pictures. To be frank, we are far more interested in British ones and the great strides they are making, not only in forcing their way on to our screens, but from a British point of view, the genuine demand the Britisher is making for pictures produced within his own country.

You must recognize, that admittedly, great and perfect as are many of the photoplays, that reach us from your side of the Atlantic, they suffer, from a British point of view, from two great defects. Either they have been made for so vast a Cosmopolitan market, they lack a direct appeal to any one particular people, or, as is so often the case, being purely the residue of the American market, they are too "Yankee" in sentiment and picturisation to entirely please our own people. You may ask, "Why are we such large buyers of your films, if the public taste wants other fare than that which is generally sent from America?" The answer is a very obvious one. We have had to have American pictures or none at all.

If there is any choice to make between the pictures you send us—the opinions here expressed are purely personal—the virile stories of your Far West—if you would only cut out the dancing saloons a bit—which would appear to be a little overdone, with the glorious picturisation of your gorgeous natural beauty, have done more to teach Britishers what America is, from the point of view of scenery than whole libraries of books or still pictures could do.

British people, who know the possibilities of the camera are more and more inclined to ask for pictures that are attuned to their ideals and whose picturisation is in keeping with their lives or at least with their associations. are becoming more insistent that British pictures or at least pictures made primarily for Britain, should appear upon her screens to a far greater extent that they do to-day.

Scotland

"Watch for Wave of New Cinema Building"

Germany is doing her best to get films into Britain, and our friends in England are adopting a do-as-you-please attitude on this question. Not so in Scotland. A Renter in Scotland was approached by an Army of Occupation soldier who was offering to get films from Germany. The matter was brought before the Renters' Association but it was not given consideration. We have enough and more from our friends in America, France and Italy, besides our own, without dealing with an enemy.

There is at present a loud outcry against the building of Cinema Houses, but at the same time those in authority are granting permission daily for new places of entertainment to be built. The old excuse of shortage of material has been knocked on the head as builders have themselves said that there is tons of materials of all kinds waiting to be used. There are bricks enough to build thousands of both dwelling houses and cinema houses, and contractors, waiting on the Government's orders for these dwellings, are glad to take in hand the work offered them by private enterprise to go ahead with such work as the erecting of places of entertainment and that of factory building which was another cause of complaint. At the same time the shortage of houses is indeed a serious matter and restriction may be ordered at any minute by the Government, limiting the number of Cinemas, etc., to a certain amount. The letters in the lay Press daily are numerous, but most of them distinctly show how ignorant the general public are in this controversy. But one can imagine the feelings of those people who cannot get a house in which to dwell. The signatories to these epistles clearly show that these are the ones who cry above the others.

"Plain English—and Less Slang in Subtitles Needed"

AS regards American productions I must say that they are A-1. The only fault I find is that American titles and sub-titles do not suit Scottish patrons. Titles in plain English would be much better. What a Fan is I might say that 99¾ per cent of my patrons don't know.

As to MOTION PICTURE NEWS on American productions it is first class. As a man of twenty years Scottish exhibiting experience, I must say it's a real live paper and I would not like to be without it.

The exhibitor comments are great and give me a great amount of information as to what I may expect from the pictures when they arrive in Scotland from America.

France

"France Will Come Back—Be Prepared"

FIRST it is my opinion the great film market must not be monopolized by a chief city, with other sections dependent. The center of our business has no reason to be more in London than in New York or Paris. Our industry has an international clientele. The motion picture belongs to the world.

The producers should find out the wants of the world for their productions. The wishes of the audiences, an exchange of views, is what should be sought.

I have passed two years in America and met many of your artists. The discipline of your stars, your photographic accomplishments, the conscientious work of your film man, all tend to give your product at the present moment an incontestable superiority on the French productions. We were at war. Our studios have been requisitioned by the army and we could not make pictures.

The French motion picture industry will come back to greater activity. We will build new studios and before a year has passed will take our place in the world market.

American pictures will always have great success amongst the French people, and it is my hope that we will soon have in our studios American directors and artists, while we will go to take pictures on your wonderful locations. We shall learn to know each other better and to esteem each other.

I every week receive the NEWS and read it with much interest. It draws me nearer my friends of America and keeps me informed of the progress of the picture industry.

M. Houry,

"Are You Ready to Say 'Welcome' to French Productions?"

In France we give a hearty welcome to American pictures and for myself I like and admire American pictures. I have seen and studied in the United States your artistic work and your wonderful technical organization, and now again in France I will tell you what I am hoping: Certainly now that the war is over and that we shall be able to work and produce, no doubt you shall welcome with the same enthusiasm our French productions.

Italy

American Film Have Brought Prices Down

The continued exploitation of the American film in Italy has produced a situation in some respects similar to that existing in Britain. Italian producers, whose work is usually of a nature calling for somewhat high costs, have been compelled to ask big prices for their pictures, mainly because there is not a large market for them out of their own country. This condition is intensified in Italy by the fact that there is not much business organization in the methods of the Italian producers.

The introduction of American pictures has consequently had the effect of bringing down the prices of the home-made article.

Japan

"Universal Has the Best of Distribution Angle"

At present the ninety-nine per cent of the foreign films to be seen in this country are of American production, the import of which having greatly increased especially since the outbreak of the war, while it should also be noted that the American films are most popularly welcomed by the local movie fans.

It is, however, much regretted that, excepting the productions of the Universal Company, almost all the American films shown in Japan are always out-of-date, there being practically no possibility for the Japanese movie fans to see any good films of the latest release. For instance, "Intolerance" and "Romeo and Juliet" (Metro), both of which being made several years ago, were first exhibited to the Japanese public very recently and we had to pay terribly high admission to enjoy those.

That the Universal films alone are usually imported much earlier than those of other firms is chiefly due to the fact that they are shown at a movie theatre in Tokyo which is under the direct management of the Tokyo branch of that company. Contrary to this, other American films come to Japan through the hand of a few moving picture agencies, thus causing, as a natural course of events, much delay in the introduction of those films to the public here.

We are confident that there are still a great number of famous movie stars in America who are not yet familiar to to the Japanese public, and we earnestly hope to see them frequently on the screens here from now on.

Sesumee Hasegawa,
Picture Editor, the Jiji Shimpo,

China

Help of Added Theatres Greatly Needed

At the present time, nearly all pictures shown in China are American productions. Some come directly from the United States, while others come indirectly from England. The Chinese as far as I know are not particular of the country pictures come from. They demand serials with plenty of action in them. Good comedies and educationals are also welcomed. But they are not in favor of love dramas and western pictures.

Hong Kong has three concerns handling films as side business. Among them Pathe does most trade. In meantime, it would not pay for an individual film production company to open its own exchange here to handle its films as there are only fifty theatres here and they change programs twice a week.

The motion picture in China is improving day by day, but that is only in the trade ports and foreign concessions and these are only places the theatres can charge a fair admission price. It will take a long time for the people living inland to get acquainted with this magic screen show, for three reasons: first, the transportation is very inconvenient; second, many large cities in inland have no electric current and third, the bandits spread all over the country make it dangerous to travel.

For extending American film trade in China at the present as well as in the future, it would be well to organize a combination American Film Headquarters at Shanghai or Hong Kong and at the same time establish a theatre or theatres at all principal cities in China as a chain. In other words, the films need the theatres' help, they would be useless if there are no theatres to utilize them.

Time for Clean Thought

Just as detrimental to the business of the well meaning producer is the fact that plaints continually reaching the News from readers and correspondents throughout the world indicate that various countries are being imposed upon by the dumping of old and poor quality film. Japan and China in particular, and in lesser degree, India, complain of this condition. Latterly reports reaching here from South American countries would indicate that unscrupulous film men are unloading what junk film they can on a market which is booming—thus effectively pouring water on the fire of prosperity and opportunity.

So it may be seen that although untold opportunities present themselves, the year that has elapsed since the armistice was signed has not brought forth the results expected. There is every hope that an early Peace and consequent restoration of industrial conditions will bring exchange to normal. There is every confidence on the part of American film men that the industry in this country can successfully continue to compete with the product of any other country, and maintain its lead.

Men and money are still flowing over to the other side. The American film man has awakened to the fact that it is up to him to hold and nurse the foreign market—that while the money is there and every opportunity present to get it, it will not continue to fall into his lap as an apple from a tree. Strong pressure will, it is felt, soon compel a ratification of peace, whereupon abnormal conditions will straighten themselves out. Realization that supremacy in the foreign market is essential to the continued advance in standards and further prosperity of the industry has sifted into the calculations for the future, as has also the fact that bulling the market at high prices with low class films is the surest method of losing the pot of gold at the rainbow's end.

National Picture Theatre Franchises Sought

The interest manifested among exhibitors in the National Picture Theatres, Inc., is flooding the offices of Lewis J. Selznick, President of the new company, with letters and telegrams from influential motion picture theatre owners. That the time is ripe for a movement of this kind where the man who exhibits pictures will share in the profits that usually go to the producer and distributor, is appreciated by Mr. Selznick who is the guiding genius of the National organization.

In one mail Mr. Selznick received the application of Ike Libson, who controls the Family, Walnut, Strand and Palace theatres in Cincinnati and the Colonial theatre in Columbus, Ohio. John P. Harris, the leading showman of Pittsburgh, made application for a franchise for the Grand and Lyric theatres of Pittsburgh and the Strand theatre, Morgantown, Pa.

Great Britian and Colonies in Review

"Great Britain and Possessions in Review"

THE Association of British Kineomatograph Manufacturers is advocating a tariff on the importation of foreign films in the United Kingdom. They claim that this would reduce the number of mediocre films imported.

Before discussing this fact, it would be worth while to consider the following announcements which appeared in the U. S. Commerce Reports. "About 95 per cent. of the moving picture films imported by New Zealand are of American production and Wellington is the chief center of distribution. There are approximately 200 picture theatres in New Zealand, with an average seating capacity of 750. In small towns the capacity is about 200, while in the cities there are some theatres accommodating over 1,000 persons."

"American motion pictures are very popular in British India and represent about 95 per cent. of the total film importations. Slapstick comedy of the better sort is in great favor, while melodramas and detective plays also go well. The greatest drawing card, however, is the American cowboy drama, with a great deal of action. It is said the audiences show the wildest enthusiasm when this type of film is displayed."

From these statements it can readily be seen how popular the American film has become. The above two little accounts were not picked because they show the American film's success in two particular fields; they were picked haphazardly from the data which I possess on the motion picture industry.

Now we can realize why the Association of British Kineomatograph Manufacturers want the importation of American films restricted. It may be safely said that they are more eager to prohibit the importation of American films than limit the importation of mediocre ones. The success of their petition will cause a great loss to American film producers whose films will be obliged to pay exorbitant import duties, thereby causing them to be practically unsalable. Although the rise of tariff duties in the United Kingdom will not effect duties in other English colonies, each colony will follow the lead of their mother country. Let us try and analyze each country separately.

In New Zealand all exposed photographic films are subject to a rigid censorship, a novel and legitimate manner of excluding foreign films. As stated above, ninety-five per cent. of their films come from the United States due not to their own volition, but to the supremacy of the American film. Although only a limited supply of films come from the United Kingdom, the people would prefer receiving films from them.

South Africa also is partial to the English film, but cannot secure the desired pictures from either England or America. Their preference is for local pictures and for this reason several film companies are established there manufacturing their own pictures. The duty on imported films is $1.21 per 100 pounds.

Georgetown, British Guiana, delights in showing serial pictures containing from 10 to 40 installments. Most of the theatres in this country are of the cheaper class, resembling our small five cent picture houses and are interested in receiving comedies of the slap-stick varieties and cheap dramas.

England's colonies offer a field to American film exporters which may be judged from the foregoing statistics.

"Britain Is Like a State Rights Territory"

I WOULD like to place in the first few lines my appreciation of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

I accept the statement on the front page, as to the field in the U. S. A., and to add to it, that it's no unimportant factor in "Dominating the Field" in this man's country; judging from the numerous clippings from it found in the news columns of the trades and daily papers.

Its reviews have been a genuine help in my selection of bookings, and that's one of the reasons I seldom go wrong. Of the many good features, The Complete Plan Book is an innovation that establishes "THE NEWS" as the "Websters Unabridged" of the motion picture World.

American productions certainly have the call here, and rightfully so, because of their merit and by their merit they will continue to hold favor though we here are afflicted with the same evils as you are, viz.: too many subjects that "are just pictures" and too few that are outstanding, or better than just ordinary, and the same method is pursued in the marketing of them. While there are no program contracts the larger companies reach the exhibitor practically the same by insisting upon his taking a number of subjects he does not want, in order to get those he does want.

American producers should also realize there is a great difference in making pictures for home consumption and for the world's market.

Much of the fault of marketing, lies however with the Americans themselves. The entire output of big corporations thrown on to the market here supported only by a few outstanding subjects, or backed up by some popular star is detrimental to the quality uplift. There is throughout Europe a feeling that the American businessman, speaking generally, is a commercial hog.

"The Big Four" have the correct idea. Sell each picture on its merits, and it must perforce have merit to sell, and in this connection there is a big field in this country for the Independent Producers of quality goods.

Great Britain is a States right proposition and should be so handled.

The conditions were never better in Great Britain than now as far as attendance at the different theatres is concerned, but—there is always a but—the unsettled state of labor and capital, the excessive taxation, the fact that the prosperity we are enjoying now is largely false, inflated prosperity, bids one be cautious and trim sail for the squall that, to say the least, is probable.

"The 'News' Helps to Spread Better Advertising Gospel"

ALTHOUGH I am situated a long way from your country, I look forward every mail to receiving the NEWS giving details of the happenings in the industry over there. One can not but note in this state of ours, and indeed in the whole of the country, the very slipshod fashion in which a show is put across, in comparison to the reports we read of your movie houses. The first thing that struck me, and which is still annoying me, is the very punk advertising that is given out. Every week it is the same thing. Nothing new, nothing attractive. Just the same old humdrum stuff. We have three daily papers here, viz., "The Age," "The Argus" and another which is the only evening paper, "The Herald." I have nothing against the papers themselves—it is the exhibitors who are at fault.

Since Alex Lorimore, of Paramount Pictures, opened the Auditorium in Melbourne as a picture house we have seen some decent advertising, but taking the whole of the exhibitors in Melbourne and the suburbs as a body, their advertising does not appear to me to be effective enough. I may be wrong, but there is no harm done in expressing one's opinons.

Things generally are now looking brighter.

Before closing this letter I would like to add a word of appreciation for "The Exhibitor Service Bureau" for the great help it is for exploiting the picture. I do not profess to be an advertising man, but I have learnt more in the last twelve months about picture advertising through taking the NEWS than I ever could hope to do by just trying the game myself. The Complete Plan Book, in conjunction with your department, is to my mind the greatest help an exhibitor could have.

Looking forward to my next batch of "Newses."

Colin E. Wood,
Melbourne, Australia.

Germany

Imitation of American Methods by the Teuton

AN interesting and first-hand account of Germany's plans for enlarging the scope of her film industry is contained in an article by Isaac F. Marcosson in the Dec. 13 issue of The Saturday Evening Post. Mr. Marcosson writes from Berlin:

Germany is entering lines that she practically ignored before the war. Films will illustrate. Prior to 1914 the German motion pictures were crude and clumsy. French and American films had a large vogue. A whole new cinema industry has been developed under the sponsorship of the Agfa, which produces the raw film in immense quantities.

The German film maker is imitating the American in that he is going in for elaborate and spectacular productions. One company has leased the famous Hagenback Zoölogical Gardens at Hamburg. A section of it has been converted into a Japanese city for an elaborate screen presentation of Madame Butterfly. Following the example set in Southern California whole movie cities have been established. At Weissensee, a resort near Berlin, a replica of Florence has been constructed as the setting for a gigantic Italian spectacle.

The development of the film industry on any kind of extended scale will serve a two-fold purpose for Germany. One is that it will aid in the general commercial upbuilding; the other is that it will be a factor in her irrepressible propaganda. Every German motion picture that leaves the country will embody some subtle selling point or attempted vindication of the Fatherland. Motion pictures speak a universal language and their educational force has always been recognized by the enterprising Teuton.

Canadian Market Battleground

English Mfrs. Band and Are Ready to Supply Continent with Features; Canada Battleground

The Canadian market is to be the battle-ground for a fight between British film producing interests and the American producers, acording to announcements made by Mr. J. B. MacKay, managing director of the Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Limited, which has offices at 97 St. James Street, Montreal, Quebec, and 73 Great Portland Street, London, England. The organization of this company was recently revealed to Canadian moving picture men and more or less startling information has been divulged by Mr. MacKay.

The declaration has been made that fourteen of the British moving picture manufacturers are interested in the move and it is stated that these producers are ready to supply the American continent with special features. Upwards of fifty British pictures have already been received at the Montreal office of the company, it is stated, and a number of these have been shown to Canadian film authorities. Official release of these productions will start in February, it is understood. As a preliminary to this step, Mr. Mackay has made a personal survey of considerable of the Canadian territory and he has been accompanied by L. Ernest Ouimet of Montreal, head of the Specialty Film Import. Limited, Canadian Pathe representatives. They recently returned from a trip to Winnipeg, Manitoba, where some of the plans of the Britishers were unfolded.

According to Mr. MacKay, the British manufacturers have made great strides with their work since the end of the actual war and the results obtained during the past year have been far above the achievements during the war, when the industry was greatly hampered by various restrictions. Mr. MacKay intimated that representative Canadians at London have seen a considerable number of the latest releases and it is expected that at least seventy-five per cent. of the new pictures will reach Canada. The British companies are putting upwards of $90,000,000 into pictures and the players are being sent to the Alps, Venice, France and other parts of Europe in order to obtain actual backgrounds for film stories. Mr. MacKay speaks of an invention controlled by Cecil Hepworth, one of the big British producers, which overcomes various difficulties in the way of light and sky conditions. He explains that this has proved to be a big help in attempting to equal the weather of California.

Mr. MacKay promises satisfactory results with British releases in the matter of punch and dramatic action and points out that the British stage has always been in the foreground in this respect. Upwards of twenty British film stars are associated with the work, he declares, and their name will shortly become well-known in Canadian theatres, he asserts. He states that London will probably soon become the hub of the moving picture industry and that the British producers are doing all in their power to meet American competition in the Canadian field.

Foreign Product Getting Hold in S. America

Just as the American film man is seeking to pry the foreign market wide open for his product, so are Italian and French leaders sifting into the South American countries intent on overcoming with their product the leadership which the U. S. product gained because of the war.

Scattered reports from our sister republics indicate that in a measure the French and Italian product is coming back to its own, despite that American pictures still continue to hold the balance of power. As in other countries, correspondents state this is because of the unloading of inferior product by Americans.

When South America turned to her great northern neighbor when French and Italian film imports ceased at the beginning of the world war, the American pictures filled a long felt want. The people had tired of the foreign product and methods of production. The new output went big and demand increased. That this condition may change, and South America go back to its first love in great measure would be an indictment of the methods followed by our exporters.

Much attention is being centered on the situation by American producers, it is understood, and supremacy of the market will not be surrendered without a hard struggle.

Wyndham Standing Lead in "Earthbound"

With T. Hayes Hunter directing, the production of Basil King's story, "Earthbound" was commenced at Goldwyn's Culver City Studios this week. Wyndham Standing plays the leading role, supported by Flore Revalles, the Russian dancer, Alec Francis, Mahlon Hamilton and others. The picture is said to be unique in its treatment of the life after death theme. It requires a great number of double exposures in order to present the spirit of the man that clings to the earth after it has left the body.

Paramount-Artcrafts Continue to Score

Cecil B DeMille's Paramount-Artcraft production, "Male and Female," continues on its career through the first-run houses, and messages are being received daily of the success scored in various cities of the country, says a statement from Famous Players-Lasky.

At the opening at the West End Lyric Theatre, St. Louis, one of the best records yet reported is said to have been made. Not only was a new attendance mark set up, according to reports, but the day's receipts exceeded the former high figures by sixty per cent.

So successful was the engagement at Moss's Broadway Theatre, New York, that it has been decided according to the Famous Players-Lasky report to hold the production over for another week.

Nor is "Male and Female" the only Paramount-Artcraft picture that is setting up new house records. At the Olympia Theatre, New Haven, all previous house records were reported to have been broken Sunday last by "The Miracle Man," the highest previous financial notch being passed by $100, it is said.

Society Drama Is Alice Joyce's First in 1920

Alice Joyce's first feature of the new year will be "Slaves of Pride", a story of society life which was written especially for her by William B. Courtney. This is Miss Joyce's first release since Rex Beach's "The Vengeance of Durand", and will precede "The Sporting Duchess", the Drury Lane melodrama, which is now nearly compelted.

Engaged by Vitagraph

Else Fuller, a young Danish actress who recently came to this country, has been engaged by Vitagraph for the leading role in "Thimble, Thimble," another of the O. Henry stories which are being directed by Edward Griffith.

The Still and Its Mission

B. Frank Puffer, still camera man at the Constance Talmadge studios

THE importance of the still as an exploitation asset for the exhibitor has caused a number of prominent editors of newspaper photoplay sections to take a definite stand on the subject of "When Is A Still?" and at the same time reserve the privilege of using the best stills regardless of the proportion of advertising.

"The most important element in the make-up of a still," says David Dietz, Photoplay Editor of the Clevèland Leader, "is the amount of drawing power it contains. A still must appeal; it must tell some interesting fragment of the big story; but most of all it must make the person who looks at it have a strong desire to see the production."

A like sentiment is shared by Harold Heffernan, former editor of the Motion Picture section of the Detroit News, who, with Mr. Dietz, has arrived at a basis by which the exhibitor may have an indication of just what kind of a still stands the best chance of newspaper reproduction, following a general discussion of the matter with B. Frank Puffer, expert still man at the Constance Talmadge Studios, 318 East 48th Street, New York City.

"Puffer's stills carry a kick, lend themselves to a proper treatment of the story and at the same time are artistic enough as photographs to induce the average photoplay editor to be glad to use them," declares Heffernan. "I have yet to find an instance where he has stretched the position of a character in order to merely make his picture add. If there is one thing essential to the proper running of a photoplay department it is an assurance that good stills will be forthcoming.

"There are plenty of opportunities to use personal pictures of the players but usually we are not serving the best interests of the exhibitor to do this. It should be the mission of a photoplay editor to generate just as much interest as possible in motion picture affairs generally and at the same time do something to assist the box office receipts of local exhibitors. For this reason a still from a forthcoming picture is a much better bit of news-propaganda than a star cut of one of the popular film players."

"In my estimation," said Mr. Puffer, "the highest mission of the still photograph is to help the exhibitor pack his house. Whether the picture is a work of art, a death scene, a crap game or what-not, the still should be of a nature that will interest the exhibitor, the newspaper man and the public.

"It is usually from the still that the lithograph paper is designed. As the advertising department is sometimes hundreds of miles away from the studio a great deal is left to the still man for selection of those scenes which are especially adaptable for billboard use.

"If I were asked what is the secret of my stills, I would reply: 'it is the light.' The science of lighting is the most difficult angle of photography. Light can do more than show shadows and high lights, or make the picture dark or bright. While my methods are not mystery mediums of making pictures, still I have spent years in perfecting them and a disclosure of the system would not be fair.

New Sales for "A Burlesque on Carmen"

The Victor Kremer offices announce this week that the First National Film Company of Kansas City, Mo., have purchased the "Champion," "Jitney Elopement," "Work" and "By the Sea" for Missouri and Kansas. "A Burlesque on Carmen" has been bought by the F. A. F. Film Enterprises of Omaha, Nebraska, for Iowa and Nebraska.

In addition to the territories mentioned above, the following buyers have also acquired these productions: Mickey Film Corporation, Chicago—Illinois and Indiana; Quality Film Corporation, Pittsburgh, Pa.—West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania; Harry M. Crandall, Washington, D. C.—District of Columbia, North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, and Delaware; Twentieth Century Film Company, Philadelphia, Pa.—Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey; and Bee Hive Film Exchange, Chicago—Northern Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin.

Pathe Release Begun by Marjorie Rambeau

Majorie Rambeau and Albert Capellani began work Monday on "The Fortune Teller," Miss Rambeau's first production for Pathe release. The scenario of Leighton Graves Osmun's play in which Miss Rambeau starred last year was made by Mr. Capellani and George Proctor. The following players have been engaged for the principal roles: Frederick Burton, Virginia Lee, Joe Burke, E. L. Fernandez and Raymond McKee.

Exploitation Helped by Maeterlinck's Tour

Taking advantage of the immense amount of publicity which is being given all over the country to the coming visit of Maurice Maeterlinck and the National Blue Bird Campaign for Happiness, exhibitors are said to be booking the Paramount-Artcraft picture, "The Blue Bird," which Maurice Tourneur made from the Maeterlinck play. According to reports, these bookings are being made to coincide with the speaking dates of Maeterlinck in various sections of the country.

Big Company Goes to Florida

Feature Produced by Films Incorporated Embraces Wide Range of Settings

FLORIDA will be the destination of the company now working on the first photoplay of Films Incorporated, starring Catherine Calvert, when the present work is completed at the Oliver Studios on East Forty-eighth Street, Manhattan, where some of the larger scenes have already been photographed. The action of the story calls for a storm at sea, and, accordingly, after taking some scenes at Palm Beach, the company will proceed out into the Gulf of Mexico to locate a real Gulf storm it is said.

From the Gulf of Mexico the company will next proceed through the South and West to the North to complete the picture in about seven weeks thereafter. The present work at the New York studio will require two weeks more at least. William W. Young, president of Films Incorporated, will accompany the actors and directors on the trip.

Lowell R. Stark is assisting Mr. Hoyt in the direction of Miss Calvert's first picture under the auspices of Films Incorporated. It is said that the cast has been carefully selected with a view to giving Miss Calvert the best possible support. Donald Marquis, the leading man, is said to fit exactly into the role of the hero in Captain Sabine Wood's story. Other actors in the cast are Grace Field, Frank Montgomery, George Pauncefort, Guy Coombs, William Riccardi and Ralph Bunker.

Owing to the extraordinary risk involved in filming the seas scenes in this story, insurance amounting to a quarter of a million dollars has been taken out on the lives of the company, it is stated.

Anita Loos Having Her Portrait Painted

By way of taking things easy prior to a minor throat operation, Anita Loos is having her portrait pointed. The artist is Karl Anderson, said to be one of the ranking American painters, who wants to immortalize the demi-tasse photodramatist in the pose of a vampirical Spaniard.

Meanwhile John Emerson is keeping the wolf from the collaborators' door by personally directing the new Constance Talmadge picture "In Search of a Sinner."

While Miss Loos lives the indolent life of a beautiful artist's model, her husband, according to the P. A., is being pursued in the early morning hours by Central Park patrolmen who object to the big scene where Constance Talmadge plucks a boquet from the shrubbery near the reservoir. Personally, we should like to know what sort of a bouquet Miss Talmadge can pluck in Central Park in December.

LaRocque to Realart

After we had just mentioned that Rod LaRocque had been with more companies than anyone else we can think of at the moment, we learn that he has changed again, and is now with Realart. Rod's next will be the lead opposite Constance Binney. This picture is to be made in the old Essanay studios at Chicago, where Rod did his first posing before the camera.

Lawrence Back East

Edmund Lawrence is back in town, having finished his contract with Wm. Fox on the coast. Several Eastern producers, it is said, want Mr. Lawrence to make pictures here, but our brand of picture weather has been so unpropitious for the past several months, that he may decide to return to California. We shouldn't blame him.

Max Linder Here Again

Max Linder has returned to America, and expects to make his residence at Beverly Hills, Calif. Just before he left France, the comedian received a letter from Monsieur Pichon, French Minister of Foreign Office, bringing him the announcement that he was proposed for the Knight of the Legion of Honour Cross, for services rendered France during the war.

PERSONAL JOTTINGS

FREDERICK A. THOMPSON will shortly be speeding coastward. Members of the M. P. D. A. as well as the Players Club will take notice of a vacant chair.

ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN is in Miami and Olive Thomas is in New Orleans. Meanwhile, R. Cecil Smith, Edward Montaigne, Marie Johnston, Lewis Allen Browne and Ella Stuart Carson are assisting John Lynch in his endeavor to obtain the best stories in the United States for their next productions.

GENE POLLAR, who is playing "Tarzan" in the Numa Pictures Corp. production of "The Return of Tarzan," is a New York boy, said to be prominent in athletic circles. As a member of the Hudson Boat Club and rowing in two and four-oared shells, he has won seven gold medals in contests with other clubs.

MAE MURRAY cooked a turkey in her apartment the other night, for a birthday surprise party for Ouida Bergere. Then, preceded by their butler, bearing the turkey aloft on a silver platter, she and Bob Learned went up in the elevator to Mr. and Mrs. Fitzmaurice's residence several floors above. Miss Murray was mighty glad they didn't live any farther away.

VINCENT COLEMAN had been reading a lot about the athletic powers of some of his co-workers at the Goldwyn, and he dropped in the other day to say "me, too." Vincent was out with a show that failed a few years ago, and he was stranded some miles from New York without any funds. Twelve miles away a country fair was in progress and Vincent walked to the town to try out a plan. He arranged with the management to stage a series of wrestling bouts in which he would meet all comers for a small share of the receipts. At the end he had knocked down enough men to satisfy an ordinary person for a life time, and he had "knocked down" enough money to take him back to New York.

GLADYS VALERIE usually gives a Christmas party to her numerous friends, but this year Miss Valerie has decided to give a kiddie party instead. She is going to invite a group of orphan asylum children to her home and have a tree for them "an' everythin'."

George Larkin "The Gentleman Unafraid"

ROGER LYTTON has very nearly recovered from the very severe cold he caught while working in a midnight fire scene recently, and is tremendously interested in the results of the efforts of an army of painters and carpenters and decorators who have been occupying every available corner of his studio apartment. He hopes the finished product will be delightful enough to compensate him for the nervous energy he has expended while watching the manoeuvres that appeared to him likely to demolish all his most cherished possessions.

EUGENE O'BRIEN looks extremely affluent these days, strolling about an exact reproduction of the N. Y. Stock Exchange in the Selznick Studio. Even the quotations on the board are correct, and excitement is just as keen as it is on Wall street, as Mr. O'Brien decides what shall be done with "His Wife's Money."

Rush "Miracle of Love," "Two-Star" Film

To expedite the making of "The Miracle of Love," in which Wyndham Standing co-stars with Lucy Cotton, it was decided to "shoot" the scenes in the House of Lords ahead of schedule, and it devolved on Leon d'Usseau, assistant director, to find wigs for the Lords on twenty-four hours' notice. Mr. d'Usseau says that the strain on his own capillaries of coiffing the bigwigs was so great that he may have to resort to a peruke himself. An added interest is lent by the fact that, of the three hundred odd players in this setting, more than three-fourths are Britishers engaged for their knowledge of the Houses of Parliament.

Montagne Does Special

Edward J. Montagne, special feature writer for Selznick pictures, completed this week the scenario of "Children of Destiny," the big special which will shortly be released on the Selznick programme. Edith Hallor will be starred in this feature, and will have the opportunity of playing three distinct roles.

Hugh Thompson Appears with Leah Baird

"Cynthia of the Minute," the Louis Joseph Vance story undergoing film dramatization for release in early spring, will be welcomed by admirers of Hugh Thompson, who appears in the leading masculine role of the story. Leah Baird will be seen as Cynthia.

Dawley Starts Another

J. Searle Dawley, who was responsible for "Twilight," with Doris Kenyon in the leading feminine role, for the De Luxe Film Company, is now making preparations to begin work on the Augustus Thomas play, "The Harvest Moon," for the Detrich-Beck combination, starring Miss Kenyon.

Lillian Hall on Coast

Lillian Hall, who left for the coast some two months since with other eastern players cast for the Rex Beach production of "Going Some," has telegraphed her representative that she will remain on the coast for another picture, the Goldwyn production having reached the cutting stage.

The Professional Section's Camera

SNAPSHOTS

Stuart Holmes—glancing at us from the upper right hand corner—has just finished a production with Grace Davison under the direction of Charles Horan.

May McAvoy—on our immediate left—will be seen in the next Alice Joyce production under Vitagraph's banner.

And to our right we find the charming presence of Gladys Valerie.

Jane Jennings sits in stately pose on a chair that might well grace a throne room.

In the lower left hand corner we find Hugh Thompson, who will next be seen opposite Leah Baird in "Cynthia of the Minute," from the Louis Joseph Vance story.

Which completes the tour of The Professional Section's Camera for this week.

GATHERED ON THE COAST

JACK FREULICH, portrait photographer at Universal City, was for a number of years photographer for Underwood and Underwood in New York, where he photographed hundreds of the most important people of the nation.

CLIFFORD HOWARD, who for more than two years was scenario editor for the American Film Company when sixteeen producing units were busy, and who has written a large number of very successful photoplays, is responsible for the story and continuity of "Blossom," now being directed by William C. Dowlan with Tsuru Aoki as star. Howard's travels enable him to give exceptional description of scenes for the locale of this picture, which has many scenes in Hilo, one of the Sandwich Islands, and others in Honolulu and San Francisco.

WILLIAM FOX has engaged Louise Lovely to again support William Farnum in all the features he will make on the coast next year. Miss Lovely appeared opposite the Fox star in the five pictures he made in California during 1919. The engagement is unique because Miss Lovely is the only leading lady who has played with Mr. Farnum in so many consecutive pictures. The new contract begins about February 1st. Despite many offers, Miss Lovely may take a holiday until the Farnum Company arrives in California.

PERCY HEATH, scenario editor at Universal City, was recently asked for a synonym for the word "speed." His answer has gone down among the classic utterances of the age. He said: "I should say that a synonym for speed would be an excitable colored gentleman outrunning a bullet on a motorcycle in the days of gin."

PEGGY PEARCE, who will be remembered as a "comedy queen," has been cast in a very important dramatic role in "Sex," the latest C. Gardner Sullivan story, which presents Louise Glaum in the starring role. J. Parker Read, Jr., who is producing "Sex," believes that one of the greatest dramatic educations is a course in comedy, where facial expression is of such intense value, so when casting he decided upon Miss Pearce. Fred Niblo is directing.

EDDIE POLO, Universal serial star, will, in January, leap from one airplane to another at DeMille field, Hollywood, to obtain a single scene for "The Vanishing Dagger," an eighteen-episode serial. Lieutenant Locklean, dare-devil of the sky, will pilot one of the planes. Jacques Jaccard will direct and Milton Moore will have the difficult task of "shooting" the scene. Polo will make the jump by means of a rope ladder.

GIBSON GOWLAND is now supporting Anita Stewart in "The Fighting Shepherdess." Less than one year ago, he received his first big part, that of the sea captain in "The White Heather." Since that time he has played the leading character role in "Blind Husbands," the new George Loane Tucker production; "Ladies Must Live," and "The Right of Way."

WALLACE MACDONALD has just been engaged as leading man for Anita Stewart in her production, "The Fighting Shepherdess," by Carolyn Lockhardt. Edward Jose has arrived from New York to direct this at the Louis B. Mayer studios for First National.

WARNER OLAND, who has been living in Hollywood, has now gone to the pretty little town of Glendale to escape the profiteering on the motion picture people by landlords and merchants in the "City Beautiful."

* * *

H. H. VAN LOAN has just started a series of articles on scenario writing in the Los Angeles Evening Express. After the first installment, in which it was announced that Mr. Van Loan would answer all inquiries relating to stories for the screen, more than fourscore letters were received.

Rich Leaves Vitagraph to Join Metro

H. Thompson Rich, who has been on the Vitagraph scenario staff for the greater part of a year, has resigned to accept a position with the Metro Pictures Corp. at Los Angeles. Mr. Rich left for the coast last week, where he will work with Maxwell Karger and June Mathis in the adapting and picturizing of some of the many plays Metro has acquired. Before joining Vitagraph's staff, Mr. Rich was Editor-in-chief of the Forum Magazine, and he has sold several feature stories to various producing companies.

Stage and Screen Both Claim Gerald Bacon

Gerald Bacon, whose late feature production "Blind Love," starring Lucy Cotton, has been placed on the state rights market by Nathan Hirsh, president of Aymon Film Corporation, has been prominently identified with both stage and screen for many years, beginning his theatrical career with Sanger and Jordan, one of New York's biggest play brokers, following a short career as mining engineer in the West.

Mr. Bacon, in addition to his work as play broker and producer for the stage, has produced more than half-dozen photodramas including "A Woman's Experience," starring Mary Boland and "Men," featuring Anna Lohr.

Directors and Pictures

THE MOTION PICTURE DIRECTORS' ASSOCIATION attended the opening performance of "The Phantom Legion," Tony Kelly's latest dramatic offering, at the Playhouse Wednesday evening. Many of those present had directed productions of Mr. Kelly's scenarios, and Charles Miller is reported to have reviewed the legitimate play with the film director's critical eye. And the play "got over."

AL ST. JOHN, Roscoe Arbuckle's nephew, also a motion picture comedian, is making his third Paramount release. It's a story of the sea and he's going to call it "Ship Ahoy!" Frank C. Griffin is handling the megaphone, as they say.

WESLEY RUGGLES, who is directing Owen Moore in a Selznick production has finished interiors and will spend a few days and nights on locations north of White Plains. It makes things nice for Owen, who can spend the night at home and have breakfast with Mother Moore.

"PARTNERS OF THE NIGHT," second Goldwyn production of the Eminent Authors series, and first to be made in the East, is being directed by Paul Scardon. Mr. Scardon and his players expect to leave early in the week for outdoor scenes near Charleston, South Carolina.

Griffith "Discovered Her"

DAVID W. GRIFFITH has served as a propelling medium to the heights of fame of many a star of first eminence in the screen world. Their names would serve to form a roster of interest. One of the most brilliant on this roster, and a young woman who has forged sensationally to the front, is Constance Talmadge.

Constance is a younger sister of Norma Talmadge. She is a native of Brooklyn and was educated in the schools there. Norma was the first of the family to be recognized at the studio, and while yet a high school girl Constance took to haunting the studios where her sister was posing. After being pictured in a number of unimportant roles, Constance, seeing that the association with her elder sister militated against her forging to the front, went to California and made the rounds of the studios there.

One day while at the Griffith studios waiting for a possible call, the producer noticed her wistful air and saw in her an artistic possibility. He engaged her, and the success attending assured her a prosperous and artistic future. Thereafter stardom was conferred upon her, and to the motion picture devotees her subsequent history is common knowledge. And she proudly boasts today that David W. Griffith was the founder of her success. Today she is at the head of her own organization, Constance Talmadge Film Company, and the first of her new pictures, "A Temperamental Wife" and "A Virtuous Vamp," released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, are considered the best comedies she has ever made. Her third picture, "Two Weeks," from the English play by Anthony Wharton, is scheduled for an early January release, and her fourth, the one on which she is now at work at her own studio on East 48th street, is an Emerson-Loos adaptation from Charlotte Thompson's "In Search of a Sinner." It is being directed by David Kirkland.

Miss Talmadge has no particular desire to play emotional roles or heavy drama. She recognizes that her forte lies in light comedy, and she believes in doing the thing one is best fitted to do, instead of crying for the moon. "I like comedies of manners," says Miss Talmadge, "comedies that are, what sounds like a paradox when I say, subtle burlesque; comedies that are funny because they delight one's sense of what is ridiculously human in the way of little, every-day, commonplace foibles and frailties—not comedies of the slapstick variety.

Constance Talmadge

"I want comedies chiefly because I enjoy making people laugh; secondly, because this type of work comes easiest and most naturally to me. I am not highly emotional in type. My sister Norma could cry real tears over two sofa cushions stuffed into a long dress and white lace cap, to look like a dead baby, and she would do it so convincingly that 900 people out front would weep with her. That is real art, but my kind of talent would lead me to bounce that padded baby up and down my knee with absurd grimaces that would make the same 900 people roar with laughter. You see, in my way, I take my work quite seriously as my sister does hers—I would be just as in earnest about making the baby seem ridiculous as she would about making it seem real. That, I think, is the secret of being funny on the speaking stage, as well as on the screen. One has to be serious in one's levity. This gives the whole distinction between being funny and being silly. I am not fitted to be a vamp type. There is nothing alluring or exotic or erotic or neurotic about me. I could not pull the Theda Bara stuff to save my life, but if I am assigned a vamp role in a comedy, I play it with all the seriousness and earnestness and sincerity with which Miss Bara would play it, except that I, of course, over-emphasize all the characteristics of the vampire.

"I try to handle a comedy role much the same way that a cartoonist handles his pencils. If he is drawing a picture of the late Theodore Roosevelt, with a few strokes he emphasizes Teddy's eyeglasses and teeth, leaving his ears and nostrils, and the lines of his face barely suggestive. One must leave a great deal to the imagination on the screen.

Hall Outlines Plans of New Year

Hallmark Will Produce Serials on Larger Scale in 1920

PLANS for the increasing of the production activities of Hallmark Pictures Corporation by-its-president, Frank G. Hall, form one of the chief items in the New Year's schedule of work laid out for the various Hallmark departments.

Until recently Mr. Hall has not entered into the serial field of pictures. His initial serial release was in October of this year, when Ben Wilson's fifteen episode serial, "The Trail of the Octopus," was placed on the market through the Hallmark Exchanges. This month will witness the release of the fifteenth and final episode of this serial, it is stated, and its success has been so marked that Mr. Hall has determined to enter the serial field on a large scale.

Beginning the new year his second serial-release, the working title to which is "The Screaming Shadow," turned out under the supervision of Ben Wilson, producer of the "Trail of the Octopus," will be placed on the market Four episodes of the serial are announced as completed by Mr. Wilson with practically the same staff surrounding him as was with him in the production of "The Trail of the Octopus."

The New Year will also witness the beginning of another serial planned by Mr. Hall in co-operation with Ascher Enterprises, Inc., with Benny Leonard, lightweight champion of the world, as the star. It is announced by Mr. Hall that the scenario will be ready shortly after the advent of the New Year, after which Leonard will start work on the Hallmark production.

During the year 1919, Mr. Hall placed on the market the initial releases of the series of pictures known as Famous Directors' Series. The plans formulated by Mr. Hall for the New Year call for the production and distribution of the remaining twenty-one pictures of this series.

With these productions and with his recent deal whereby he took over the Exhibitors Mutual Exchange and distributing rights to the Clarke-Cornelius Corporation series of twelve Chaplin Classics, Mr. Hall believes he has a schedule marked out for the year 1920 that will give to the exhibitors a high class of motion picture productions and service.

Hallmark's Chaplin Issues Make Records

That the initial releases of the series of twelve Chaplin De Luxe Comedies are meeting with big popularity throughout the country is certified to by a letter received recently from the manager of the Majestic Amusement Co., operating a string of theatres in Oklahoma, by General Sales Manager W. F. Rodgers, of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, which organization is distributing the Chaplin Classics as presented by Clarke-Cornelius Corporation. The management of the Majestic Amusement Company writes: "In playing Chaplins in our houses we featured the comedy over our regular feature, as experience has proved that this is the way to get the money. We stood them up every performance on the opening day and broke all house records. But the best part of it all was that the crowded performances held out for the remaining two days of the engagement again breaking records on both days."

First Grossman Feature a Detective Drama

Harry Grossman, president of Grossman Pictures, Inc., announces that he has completed his first feature production, "Wits vs. Wits," in which Marguerite Marsh is the star. The picture has been assembled and is being shown to the trade. Mr. Grossman has completed arrangements for the sale of the production and announcement will be made later of the method of distribution.

"Wits vs. Wits" is a detective story and is said to have been given an elaborate production. It was directed by Mr. Grossman personally. Miss Marsh is shown in one of the best parts of her career.

Besides Miss Marsh, those in the principal parts are Coit Albertson, Joseph Marba, Charles Middleton, Bernard Randall, Leora Spellman and E. D. Bingham.

"Man and Woman" Is Tyrad Offering

Matt Radin, president and general manager of Tyrad Pictures, announces that Jacques Tyrol is now in the finishing of a super-feature written by Winifred Dunn entitled "Man and Woman," in six reels featuring Betty Mason.

The picture deals with the trials and tribulations that man and woman go through in life. It takes the different types of woman and the different types of man. It is not a sex drama and does not deal with the sex question in any form, shape or manner, it is announced.

Serial Shows Power of Mind

Reeves of Supreme Pictures Promises Something New in "The Master Mind"

SOMETHING never before attempted in serials is promised by Arthur B. Reeve, of "Craig Kennedy" fame, and John W. Grey in the new serial, "The Master Mind," starring J. Robert Pauline and Violet MacMillan, which Reeve and Grey are producing in the Flushing studio of Supreme Pictures.

"The secret of serial success nowadays is to put over a new idea in every serial," said Mr. Reeve, who is vice-president of Supreme Pictures. "My 'Exploits of Elaine' made science famous in the movies, with Pearl White and Arnold Daly who played Kennedy, scientific detective. The 'House of Hate' had a central theme, the crushing blight of war and making millions out of the blood of our fellow men. Houdini and his marvelous escapes and feats were the new feature of 'The Master Mystery' and our 'Grim Game.'

"All serials have 'mystery,' 'romance,' 'adventure.' What is to be the new note sounded?

"When Mr. Grey and I looked about for a great idea around which to build the serial we are producing we got what we think is a very powerful and novel theme. It is the power of the mind. At once it occurred to us that no one could put this idea over better than the greatest specialist entertainer in this field, J. Robert Pauline, known in vaudeville for years from Coast to Coast and around the world.

"Hypnotism has never been done before so convincingly as Pauline does it in 'The Master Mind.' In our first episode where Pauline shows us some of the secrets in his marvelous power, we had a scene in which a congress of sceptical doctors were to witness his demonstration, as he stopped and started the flow of blood by hypnotism, hypnotized a subject so that four men could stand on the boy's body while his heels rested on one chair and his head on another. We had a couple of score of extras, sophisticated movie people for the scene. They were fascinated by what Pauline did in an uninterrupted shot before the camera."

Exploiting Picture With Colored Player Cast

Clarence A. Brooks, Secretary of the Lincoln Motion Picture Company, Inc., 1121 Central Avenue, Los Angeles, Calif., was a New York visitor on an extensive road show trip that carries him over the entire United States in conjunction with the exploitation of their latest feature, "A Man's Duty," featuring exclusively negro actors.

It has been learned that at the completion of this trip in the Spring, the Lincoln Company will produce other five reel features with negro actors every five or six weeks in the forthcoming year.

National Film Schedule for 1920 Formulated

The 1920 production schedule of the National Film Corporation has been completely formulated and is being put into actual operation as fast as conditions will allow. Among the stories to be filmed during the winter months will be Opie P. Read's "The Kentucky Colonel," with Joseph J. Dowling, of "The Miracle Man" fame in the title role, supported by Elinor Field and Francis McDonald. William Seiter is directing the piece.

The first week of the New Year will see the beginning of the picturization of "Mary Minds Her Business," by George Weston. "Mary Minds Her Business" is running serially in the "Ladies Home Journal" until March of next year, when it will be placed on the market in book form, it is hoped about the time the film version is completed.

Fisher's New One

A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., will make its next production from an original story by Charles A. Logue, adaptor of "The Amazing Lovers," from Robert W. Chambers' story of "The Shining Band," and the author of "The Red Virgin," the first two subjects put on by the Fischer firm.

The piece, as yet untitled, is a drama based upon the theme that clothes make civilization. It will go into production immediately, with Florida and the Fischer studios in New Rochelle as the scenes of the company's activities.

Arthur Ripley is New Metro Director

A new director, in the person of Arthur D. Ripley, has been added to the directorial staff under Director General Maxwell Karger, at the new Metro studios in Hollywood, California. Mr. Ripley will direct Bert Lytell in his forthcoming Metro-Screen Classics production of "Alias Jimmy Valentine," which Finis Fox has adapted from the famous stage play by the late Paul Armstrong.

Small Village Built for Metro Picture

A Canadian village street scene built by Metro on the old Universal ranch in the San Fernando Valley, outside of Los Angeles, California, was the setting for Bert Lytell's new Screen Classics, Inc., picture, "The Right of Way," for several days.

This complete street was more than two hundred yards long. Stores and houses typical of the backwoods country of Canada were built on both sides.

Vincent Coleman to Play in Goldwyn Production

Vincent Coleman, who was recently seen in the leading role in "Should a Husband Forgive?" a Fox special production, has been engaged by Director Paul Scardon for a prominent role in the film version of Leroy Scott's popular novel, "Partners of the Night."

Willard Mack to Do a Series

Gibraltar Pictures Signs Well-Known Author; Filming "Cynthia of Minute"

GIBRALTAR Pictures have signed Willard Mack, author of "Tiger Rose," "Kick In," and numerous other Broadway hits, to a two-year contract to write an exclusive series of scenarios for Gibraltar production, to be known as the Willard Mack Melodramas.

Mr. Mack has already begun work on the first of these dramas, which is based on certain adventurous happenings east and west upon which the author has been building a tentative structure from time to time. The idea as related in the rough, promises fast action of the sort for which Mack plays are famous.

The contract with Mr. Mack is the culmination of long negotiations between the author and Arthur F. Beck. It is anticipated that the first of the Willard Mack series of plays will go into production early in January.

Some of the most striking scenes in the new Gibraltar Pictures melodrama "Cynthia of the Minute," starring Leah Baird, are being filmed on board the interned German liner Kronprinz Frederic Wilhelm, which was placed with the Prinz Eitel Frederick, renamed the De Kalb, and the Grosser Kurferst, in American hands for troop repatriation after the armistice was signed between Germany and the Allies.

Leah Baird and her company of players have been practically living aboard the big liner for a week past, and several of the principal cabins as well as part of the salon deck have been fitted with a lighting system for the uses of the company.

The story of "Cynthia of the Minute" is laid in great measure on board ship, and the far flung lines of the great craft lend themselves admirably to pictorial effect.

A large number of Uncle Sam's naval reserves now forming the crew of the big ship as she lies at anchor off Spuyten Duyvil, have been enlisted to serve in some of the deck scenes.

Planning Jack London Series

C. E. Shurtleff Who Controls Rights to Stories is on Ground at Metro Studio

C. E. SHURTLEFF, president of C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., is making plans for the forthcoming production of four Jack London novels, with Mitchell Lewis as the star. C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., controls the motion picture rights to these four stories, which are "Smoke Bellew," "A Daughter of the Snows," "The Star Rover" and "Burning Daylight."

As recently announced, Screen Classics, Inc., will produce, and Metro distribute the Jack London picturizations of the Jack London novels, with Mitchell Lewis starring. Mr. Shurtleff will be "on the job" all the time at the Metro studios. He went there to Hollywood, Calif., where the studios are situated, in company with J. Frank Brockliss, the English picture man associated with him in C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., and Richard A. Rowland, the Metro president.

Before turning the Jack London stories that he controls over to Metro for screen production, Mr. Shurtleff received numerous offers from other producing companies to make the novels into screen productions. He chose Metro because of its modern production facilities.

Mr. Shurtleff is an experienced film man. Hitherto, however, his activities have been confined more to the selling than to the producing end of the industry. He was general sales manager for Select and Hodkinson. At the Metro studios he is making a close first-hand study of production methods as they are employed in this modern and lavishly equipped plant.

Elliott in "The Hope" Has Original Role

Frank Elliott who was leading man in the original production of "The Hope" at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane, London, has been signed to play a principal role in the Metro-Screen Classics, Inc., production of the melodrama. Herbert Blache will direct the production.

City Seeks Art Exhibit Based on Film Scenes

Seldom if ever does a motion picture evoke enough comment among the art enthusiasts of a city to warrant an official request from its art authorities to go forward to a film exchange for permanent exhibits of some scenes in the production.

That is what occurred, however, in Constantine, Michigan, following the engagement of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, special, "Auction of Souls," which recently played a two-day engagement in that city. The picture created unusual comment, not only among the regular motion picture goers of Constantine, but among those with whom art is a hobby. Manager Harry Scott of the First National Michigan exchange, in Detroit, received a communication from H. J. Meyers of Constantine, asking if arrangements could be made to supply the Constantine Art Museum with several permanent exhibits based on several of the most beautiful scenes in the picture.

The exhibit will be furnished.

Heavy Demand Reported on Grossman Serial

"1,000,000 Reward" the Grossman serial production in which Lillian Walker is starred has been shown to the trade in New York, Boston and other centers and reports are to the effect that it is in great demand among exhibitors. Nathan Hirsch, who controls the New York City rights, gave a trade showing this week and reports widespread bookings.

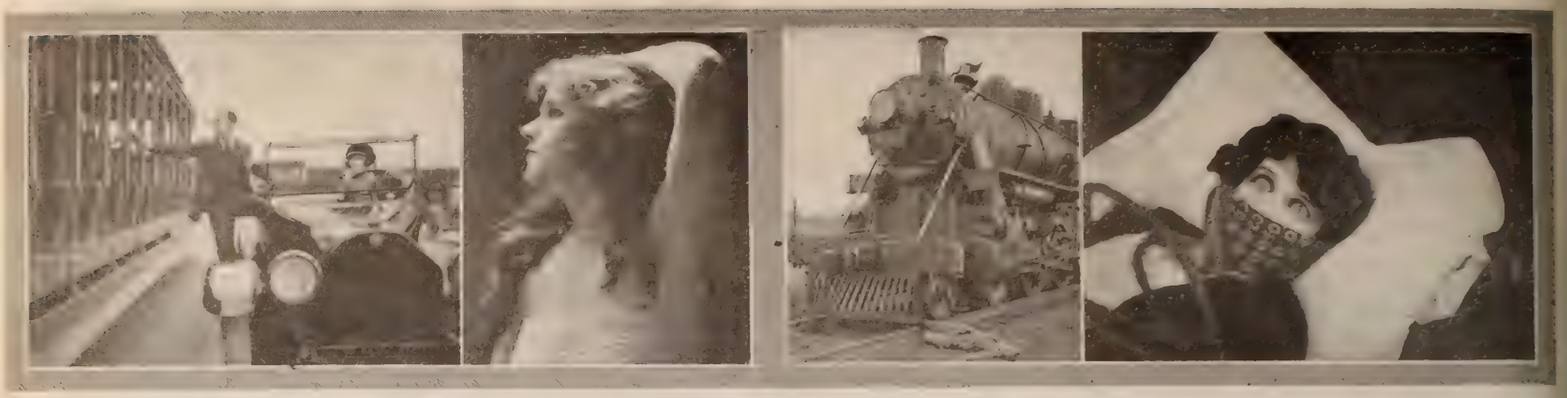
States rights on the serial have been practically all disposed of and it will shortly be released.

Last Scenes Taken On a Transatlantic

Edmund Breese and Claire Whitney have just completed the last few scenes for the Transatlantic superproduction which heretofore has been known under the title of "The Greater Glory," scenario by Lloyd Lonergan.

The picture is in seven reels and if reports are true, contains many spectacular scenes.

The final scenes were "shot" at the Mirror Studios at Glendale, L. I., with Burton King directing and George Morgan assisting.



Arline Pretty is the star in the fifteen episode serial "The Woman in Grey" which comprises many exciting thrills. The serial was produced by the Serico Producing Company.

Filming Historic Spots of the Civil War

The presence of Roy Buckley of Chicago, famous flying ace of the La-Fayette escadrille in Chattanooga with a crew from the Atlas Educational Film Company of Chicago, filming a reel of scenic and historic interest for release through the Greiver Distributing Corporation, has aroused much comment in the press of the southern city, it is reported.

The films will be taken from Chattanooga to Savannah, and the picture will be entitled "From Chattanooga to the Sea." It is planned to show the picture in 2,500 motion picture theatres throughout the United States, giving a big boost to the scenic and historic spots of Tennessee and Georgia. In addition to Buckley, the party is composed of C. E. Ashley, director, R. G. Ganstrom and Harry Peterson, camera men.

Lehrman Feature Goes to First National

The first Henry Lehrman feature has been delivered to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. The title of Mr. Lehrman's initial feature is "A Twilight Baby." In this release Mr. Lehrman has departed from his usual two-reel offerings, as "A Twilight Baby" is in four reels.

The entire Lehrman stock company was utilized besides the services of three hundred extra people. Those who witnessed the preview of this feature have declared it to be an absolute innovation in the field of comedy.

Films Inc. Engages New Publicity Director

Films Incorporated has secured the service of Mrs. Marie Shores as director of publicity. For the past three years she has been production manager for The Robert J. Shores Corporation, book publishers, and associate editor of New York editorial service. Mrs. Shores will also head the Scenario Department.

Additions to Neilan's Producing Force

Marshall Neilan last week made two important additions to his producing organization in the persons of Betty Bouton, ingenue, and Dave Kisson, well known cameraman.

Miss Bouton will have a prominent part in the second independent Neilan production.

Denies Davison Rumors

General Manager States Grace Davison Will Continue with the Pioneer Film

GENERAL MANAGER M. H. HOFFMAN of the Pioneer has issued the following statement of denial of the rumors which are still widely current in film circles that Grace Davison is to leave the Pioneer to join the Famous Players-Lasky organization.

Mr. Hoffman states in part: "This rumor is pure fiction. How it originated is of no consequence, inasmuch as Miss Davison is completely satisfied with the manner that she is being exploited by the Pioneer. Her latest production, 'Atonement,' in which she appears with Conway Tearle, is meeting with pronounced success throughout the country and in New York in particular. It is shortly to be shown at the representative houses in all parts of New York City and State.

"Part of this rumor which states that Miss Davison will produce for herself, brands the entire story as nonsense. Miss Davison has always produced her own pictures, while the Pioneer acts solely as distributor.

"The relations between John Gracey Pictures, Inc., which is producing the Davison features, and the Pioneer Film Corporation has been from the start most cordial and such it remains at the present."

The Pioneer Film Corporation further reports that Grace Davison will be starred in "The Hidden Code," an adaptation of the novel by Norman Harsell. The production was directed by Richard Lestrange and photographed by Harry Fishbeck. "The Hidden Code," which was produced by the Sulmac Pictures, Inc., will, according to an agreement just entered into, be distributed on the state right plan by the Pioneer.

This production is described as an American Arabian Nights story, inasmuch as the claim is made that the picture is replete with rapid-fire action and deals with nothing but pure romance and excitement.

"Cooperate to Supply Market"

S. L. Barnhart of Capital Film Urges an Amalgamation of Independent Producers

ONE of the most surprising situations of the film industry as it stands with the closing of 1919, exists to-day, according to S. L. Barnhard, president of the Capital Film Company.

Mr. Barnhard's statement of conditions is to the effect that—despite the chaotic situation throughout the country due to the closing of theatres in many districts by order of the Fuel Administration, and with the general high cost of living—the only way to supply the remarkably healthy demand from the independent exchanges for features of all classes is by some sort of co-operation or amalagamation of the independent producers.

"In what form of amalgamation or by what means the independent producers may be brought to co-operate with one another to attain the objective is, of course, a hazardous problem," states Mr. Barnhard. "One thing is certain, however, and that is that the Capital Film Company is going to strive to the utmost to bring about such a co-operation with the earliest possible speed."

"We have taken it upon our shoulders to foster this movement," continued Mr. Barnhard. "For the simple reason that the Capital Film Company cannot possibly hope to produce enough pictures alone to take care of its present list of exchanges."

Mr. Barnhard is planning a trip to the Coast immediately after the holidays for the sole purpose of arranging for more productions, but he confesses he will be unable to start enough new companies to adequately serve the demand.

Accordingly, the Capital Film Company has sent out broadcast to all producers the hearty invitation to place their productions—no matter what type of picture—through the Capital Film Company's distributing resources, and is in no way attempting to conceal the fact that they need other producers' films to solve the solution of supplying the demand.

"Tides and the Moon" said to be a distinct departure from the ordinary matter presented in pictures, features the January 4 issue of Goldwyn-Bray Pictographs.

Vitagraph's final release of the year will be "The Sins of the Mothers," a story with Anita Stewart in the leading role.

It is said that in filming "My Husband's Other Wife," the third of this series of productions for distribution through Pathe, J. Stuart Blackton virtually had to stage an entire theatrical production. The photodrama opens with the enactment on the stage of the most dramatic moment in a big play, supposedly written by Robert Gordon, with Sylvia Breamer, as Adelaide Hedlar, the star.

Mr. Blackton produced the stage scene in the studio of Blackton productions, in Brooklyn. The stage of the Majestic Theatre in Brooklyn was used to photograph the scenes which occurred behind the wings

Besides Miss Breamer and Mr. Gordon, who have the featured parts, Warren Chandler and May McAvoy have big roles in "My Husband's Other Wife"

American-Born Swede Is Big Film Producer

Victor Seastrom, an American-born Swede, who is a star as well as a director, has been declared the "Griffith" of Scandinavia. Seastrom's productions for the Swedish Biograph Company will soon reach American motion picture screens. About ten years ago, when Charles Magnusson assumed the management of the Swedish Biograph Company, he sought a man of exceptional talents to direct film plays. Seastrom was his choice.

The Swedish "Griffith" has undertaken to picturize the master works of Scandinavian literature. His first American release will be announced soon.

Director Fred Sullivan Goes with Christie

The Christie Film Company has secured Frederic Sullivan, well known moving picture director and stage manager, as one of the new directors who will guide the destinies of the Christie Comedies, according to Al E. Christie, who is now supervising the production of all Christie one-reel comedies and Specials in two reels.

The acquisition of Mr. Sullivan will give the Christies an oportunity to allow the other directors, Al E. Christie, Scott Sidney, William Beaudine and others, to alternate in their production activities with more time for preparation of stories.

Two Features Open for State Rights Buyers

According to a report recently received, shortly after January 5th a representative of the J. Frank Hatch Enterprises will start on the road covering all territories where Mr. Hatch's state rights productions have not been sold. In visiting the buyers their representative will be in a prosition to screen both "The Price Woman Pays," featuring Beatrize Michelena, and "Forced to Wed," starring Lois Wilson.

"The Price Woman Pays" offers Beatrize Michelena and Lois Wilson in two powerful roles. They are said to be supported by a strong cast, and it is also stated that the story is consistent and with an unusual happy ending. Forced to marry is the lot that befalls Lois Wilson, in Mr. Hatch's state right production, "Forced to Wed." Without the usual formality of falling in love, Nellie was forced to marry the man after she went to his room to warn him of an attempted robbery. Later the kindness of an old Indian brings the wounded man back to health and binds the two hearts in deeper bonds of partnership and love.

"Movical" Comedy Makes Its Debut on Screen

It is announced by the Theatrical Pictures Corporation that "Movical" comedy has made its appearance in the form of the five-part production, "The New Wizard of Oz" combined with an original musical comedy entitled "The Movie Girls Revue." "The New Wizard of Oz" is from the book by L. Frank Baum and is an elaborately staged production with Violet Macmillan, Frank Moore, Vivian Reed and Mae Wells prominent in the large cast.

"The Movie Girls Revue" is a short snappy musical comedy written especially for presentation in connection with the picture. Sol Levy is responsible for the original musical numbers while Hopp Hadley has contributed some of the lyrics.

American Laboratories Open to Serve All

All the facilities of the American Film Company's big Chicago laboratories are now at the service of anybody wishing film developed, printed, tinted, toned or sub-titled.

In this issue the American Film Company, Inc., announces that it is prepared to do commercial developing and printing. In fact for several months past the Chicago laboratory has been handling a good volume of this sort of work—developing the negative exposed by free-lance camera men all over the Middle West, making as many positive prints as were needed and turning out the work in a surprisingly short time.

American's prices for developing and printing are reported to be reasonable, and the speed with which this work is handled should prove of material assistance to the customer who is up against a "time limit" and simply must have a "rush job" if positive prints are to be ready on time.

Latest Burston Serial Sells Fast

BURSTON FILMS, INC., report that a trail is rapidly being blazed through state rights territory for their latest serial, "The Hawk's Trail," fifteen episodes, starring King Baggot in the name part, and with Grace Darmond and Rhea Mitchell as joint leads opposite. Within a little more than a week after the first announcement of the placing of the said serial feature on the market a number of sales have been consummated. The unanimous opinion of the reviewers as to the quality of "The Hawk's Trail" has spurred bidders into action with the result that the following territories have been sold:

Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee to the Special Features Co. of Knoxville, Tenn.

North Carolina and South Carolina to the Eltabran Film Exchange of Charlotte, N. C.

Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, California, Arizona and Nevada to Sun Films, Inc., Los Angeles. This sale includes both "The Hawk's Trail" and "The Mystery of 13," the Burston-Ford serial recently released.

The three Canadian rights—Eastern, Central and Western Canada—were disposed of to one buyer, the Regal Films Co. of Toronto., Ontario, Canada.

Another sale has been made, larger than any of the above, but as the buyer wishes to make his own announcement his name is withheld for the present. The rapidity with which these sales were made, and the number of inquiries that are coming in daily in responce to trade press advertising indicates that the independent serial market is wholesomely active, although the reputed success of the former Burston serials is also held to be responsible. The sales were made by the distributing agents, the W. H. Productions Co.

The Publicity Department of Burston Films, Inc., announce that the Exhibitor's Book of "The Hawk's Trail" will contain something more than clever advertising stunts, newspaper cuts, reproductions of posters and other advertising supplies. Advance notices of "The Hawk's Trail" have all laid special stress upon the episode endings and the fact that they differed from the average "stunt" endings, in that they depended for carrying suspense into the next installment through situations and plot development rather by leaving some character in a perilous situation. As proof of this long held contention the Exhibitor's Campaign Book will give the exhibitor a goodly quantity of advertising paragraphs, phrases and slogans, all of which are being compiled from the reviews of the serial given by the official reviewers of the trade papers.

"The Hawk's Trail" Has Been Disposed of in Many States

"The Inferior Sex" Complete

Mayer Will Soon Place Mildred Chaplin's New Production on the Market

FILMING of "The Inferior Sex," Mildred Harris Chaplin's latest and best picture, has been completed at the Louis B. Mayer studios, Los Angeles, and the picture will soon be placed on the market as a First National release. Titling and cutting of the picture is under way at the Mayer laboratories under the supervision of Joseph Henabery, "Billy" Shea and the executives of the studios.

In the production of "The Inferior Sex" Mildred Harris Chaplin is said to be seen at her best in a punchy story. She is supported by a cast including Milton Sills, Mary Alden, Bertram Grassby, John Stepping and James O. Barrows.

Joseph Henabery, who directed Douglas Fairbanks' last big picture, "His Majesty—the American," directed "The Inferior Sex." The picture is a screen adaptation of Frank Stayton's legitimate drama, which some years ago served as Maxine Elliot's Broadway starring vehicle. The story is claimed to be full of punches and to contain a gripping climax. Throughout are interspersed jots of human interest.

In order to add the final touches to a beautiful screen story some of the most beautiful locations in California were used. These include the fashionable Del Monte Hotel, Peeble Beach, Seventeen Mile Drive and a number of San Francisco and Los Angeles mansions.

The production was made under the management of Louis B. Mayer and Bennie Zeidman, vice-president and manager of the Chaplin-Mayer Pictures Co., Inc.

MacManus Film Timely

With the country hearing of cruelty in the Bedford Reformatory, and Joliet prison, and the starting of a wide spread reform movement by the Gray Brotherhood of reformed prisoners, the production of Edward A. McManus' picturization of Thomas Mott Osborne's prison experiences is timely.

While Mr. MacManus claims to have avoided propaganda in "The Gray Brother" and to have evolved out of Mr. Osborne's experiences a romantic drama, it is said that he has enough incidents of life within prison walls under the old system of brutality to emphasize the absolute necessity of such a movement as the Gray Brotherhood has started to prevent a recurrence of some of the horrors to which prisoners were subjected to in Sing Sing and Auburn and which are said to prevail in Joliet and other prisons in the Western states."

Neilan Uses Big Four Studio

MARSHALL NEILAN has signed with Douglas Fairbanks for the use of the Big Four Star's studio in Hollywood, where the director will produce his second independent production, the title of which is not available at this time. It is stated that this film is an adaptation by Marion Fairfax, of a serial novel which is at present running in one of the large national magazines. The executive offices of the Marshall Neilan organization will remain at 1723 Allesandro street, Los Angeles, pending the erection of Mr. Neilan's own studio, plans for which are now being completed.

The production of Mr. Neilan's initial independent picture, which is practically finished, has been interrupted by bad weather at the exterior location where the company was working and which plays an important part in the story.

For the lead in his second independent offering, Mr. Neilan has engaged Matt Moore, the third member of the most famous motion picture family. Mr. Neilan had Mr. Moore come on from New York for this work.

Marjorie Daw, recently signed by Mr. Neilan under a long term arrangement and who also appears in his initial independent production, will play another leading role in the new film. Miss Daw's work in the first Neilan offering is said to offer the talented little actress her most dramatic characterization. Little Wesley Barry, Mr. Neilan's "freckle-faced wonder boy," also recently signed on a long term contract by the director.

Stars Emily Stevens in Pioneer-Atlas Film

Emily Stevens has been signed up by the Atlas Film Corporation to play the leading role in the picture version of Harold Macgrath's novel, "The Place of Honeymoons." Pioneer will handle the picture through its exchanges on the state rights plan. Keenan Buel has been engaged to direct the production, while L. E. Dadmun will be in charge of the technical direction. The scenario is now being prepared by Ida Harrison.

"Topics of the Day" Is Used as Headliner

The Majestic Vaudeville Circuit in Texas has booked The Literary Digest "Topics of the Day" and is said to be playing this popular reel of paragraphs as a headline "act" with great success. According to reports, the Majestic theatre in Dallas, one of the finest houses of the circuit, opens every show with this entertaining reel, produced by Timely Films, Inc.

Exhibitors Service Bureau

To the Whole Film Industry—Greetings

THE Exhibitors Service Bureau wishes to add its voice to the chorus of "Merry Christmas and Happy New Year's" with which this, our Christmas number, is replete. Your next copy will bear the 1920 imprint, signifying that another twelve months have been laid away in the annals of time, in your life, in the files of the News and in the efforts of the Service Bureau to advance your interests.

Born of a desire to create a medium through which a closer relation with the exhibitor might be effected and nursed through its infancy by competent direction (not the writer's, however) and high grade editorial supervision, the Exhibitors Service Bureau passed through the swaddling clothes days and is now a thriving youth full of promise for a long and useful life. We say youth because we do not think that it has grown to maturity nor reached its greatest value to the industry.

It has achieved that greatest of all successes—imitation—but, still growing, can be truthfully said to be a lap ahead of all competitors.

We see many things which we believe will make it more valuable to every reader, whether he be exhibitor, producer or connected with any of the many departments of the film industry. Some are impossible of accomplishment, at least just now, but others are being considered, if not actually planned, and hold much promise of great value.

To continue covering our particular field from the same angles and in the same way would soon mean that we did not lead. So it is that we are continually studying our work and attempting to remodel and improve it. The year closing has been an important one in the industry and a memorable one in the growth of exploitation, considered from all sides—exhibitor, producer and a new factor, the exchange expert.

In no department has the improvement been so marked as in the presentation and exploitation of features by the exhibitor. In this fact the Service Bureau modestly claims credit. Not for originating or improving the methods now in vogue, but in having organized itself so well that it is able to collect the exploitation and presentation ideas of the exhibitors in various parts of the country and by transferring those ideas to the printed page inform the exhibitor of Maine what the exhibitor of California is doing, why he does it and what the results of his efforts are.

That is the mission of the Exhibitors Service Bureau—To Serve.

With this thought paramount we have made some changes in our department recently. "How New York Stages the Show" has been discontinued because the need for it diminished. The art of presenting pictures in all the larger cities has grown until it rivals New York, if it does not excel it; therefore other cities do not need lessons from the Metropolis.

With this week's issue "Your Idea and Ours" undergoes some changes. It has been proven that one of its greatest values lies in the reproductions of the displays themselves, framed as they are by the best advertisers and artists in the country, and that our criticism was not of any great interest except to the person who framed a display. Therefore in the future we have adopted certain rules for our selection of displays for those pages. First, a high class ad on a feature which we expect will receive more than an average booking. Second, so far as possible the use of displays framed by experts—men who have studied the theory of advertising and whose work can be considered that of the master. Third, displays on features close to release date, so that even first run houses may have the benefit of the other fellow's knowledge, at least as a matter of confirming his own good judgment. Fourth, so far as possible displays used for pictures listed in the programs of principal houses in principal cities, as they appear under the title of "With First Run Theatres."

For the benefit of the advertiser who wishes our advice and criticism of his efforts in framing newspaper displays, we will continue to render the same service as before, except that our opinion of his work will be mailed directly to him and not be used in our text pages.

For the pages formerly devoted to "Your Idea and Ours" we will use our recently inaugurated service mentioned above, "With First Run Theatres," as backing for properly captioned reproductions of newspaper displays.

With this issue still another addition is made to our service in the text to be found under the title of "Exploitation Men's Minute Book," being a record of what the exploitation experts employed by the producers, and located at their various exchanges, are doing. So far as the exhibitor is concerned this will not be materially different than our other exploitation pages. It will, however, give credit where credit is due and be a just recognition for services well rendered.

We have spoken of our desire to serve and of improvements to the Service Bureau being planned. In this latter connection, we invite suggestions. Give us your frank honest opinions. Tell us where we fail and wherein we may improve.

The change in "Your Idea and Our's" was brought about through the suggestion of an exhibitor. This suggestion came in the form of a full sized brickbat, from a man whom we have never seen. He wrote us a letter that called our attention to certain shortcomings in the department, which previously had not been apparent. He encouraged us to look about for a remedy to the fault which he pointed out. We think we have found it. If we haven't we want to know about it, the sooner the better.

Therefore we urge you to point another brickbat our way if this latest service does not meet with your approval.

Again we express our best wishes.

"Every Woman" Premiere at Columbus, Ohio

Will D. Harris, Manager of the Grand Theatre, Stages Elaborate Prologue in Conjunction With Showing

GIVING "Everywoman" its American premiere and staging a prologue so elaborate that in itself, it might be called an evening's entertainment, has combined lately in keeping Will D. Harris, manager of the Grand theatre, of Columbus, Ohio, a fairly busy gentleman.

Presenting "Everywoman" for its first public showing was an event that Mr. Harris determined to make a mile-stone in his exhibiting career, and in looking about in his mind's eye for something out of the ordinary so far as presentation was concerned, he chose the prologue as the best means of getting out of the everyday rut.

Manager Harris's prologue was divided into several acts, and really more resembled a revue than it did the ordinary prologue as staged for the ordinary motion picture.

In the accompanying illustrations you will be able to get some idea of the magnitude of the event.

Femininity, from the little tot age to budding womanhood were represented. Interpretive dancing was the keynote of the spectacle.

Properly costumed and wonderfully drilled, the various numbers on the bill were given to a most enthusiastic reception at every performance. The acts were as follows:

"The Diving Girls," four young ladies of excellent figure, attired in bathing suits which would have done credit to the Mack Sennett girls.

"The Snow Dance," a pretty number by three maidens.

"The Egyptian Dance," given by nine young ladies.

"The Little Kewpies," presented by six little girls, one of which was Manager Harris's daughter. This was the banner act of the attraction, and was given encore after encore at every performance. Little Janet Goodfellow was the Premier Danseuse in this number.

Much of the talent for Mr. Harris' prologue was secured from a Columbus dramatic school and therefore could be considered in no way amateur, so far as the quality of the performance was concerned. It did, however, have all the pulling power of the home talent show, and it was this fact that was one of the factors in the big success of the prologue.

Mr. Harris deserves great credit for the manner in which he measured up to an American premiere of a great picture. He billed the picture with startling vigor. A thousand one-sheets of attractive design flashed all over Columbus; twenty-four sheets; window cards; heralds and teaser snipes all added to the public interest. But Mr. Harris reached the climax of his campaign with his newspaper space. Full page ads—the first seen in Columbus on an amusement enterprise—were used in the Saturday and Sunday papers preceding the opening. In one newspaper Mr. Harris succeeded in having them print his page spread in three colors, an hitherto unheard of thing in the Ohio capital city.

THE EGYPTIAN DANCE lead by Marguerite Davies

Mr. Harris, with his accustomed artistic good sense, framed his presentation of "Everywoman" in an impressive way. His massive theatre was fittingly decorated and as a prelude he presented a number of children from a dramatic school in a little dance number that evoked tremendous and kindly interest. Mr. Harris' little daughter was among those in the prelude. Imagine the pride of Daddy Harris in having an American premiere at his theatre and his own daughter taking part!

The showing of "Everywoman" at the Grand, Columbus, is another page in a remarkable bit of picture history. "Everywoman" broke the attendance and box office records established the previous Sunday by "Male and Female." And "Male and Female," upon its opening, broke the record of "The Miracle Man" opening two weeks before! Three records in four weeks! Mr. Harris will keep up his wonderful display of showmanship by offering "Everywoman" for two weeks, to be followed by a return engagement of "Male and Female," and then a third week's engagement of "The Miracle Man."

Tom Mix visits the Liberty theatre, Blackwell, Oklahoma. Manager J. C. Hartman and a lady we do not know also pose for the cameraman

Star of Western Pictures Invades Oklahoma

JUST what Tom Mix was doing out in Blackwell, Oklahoma, when the photograph from which the accompanying cut was made, when according to all the rules of picture making he should have been in California earning his salary as a motion picture star by doing the stunts on and off horseback for which he is famous, we do not know. Anyway, there he is standing in front of the Liberty theatre with manager J. C. Hartman, who also owns another showshop, the Regent, in Blackwell.

With a Mix film scheduled for showing, and Tom Mix to make a personal appearance, any manager ought to be figuring what sort of a new buzz-buggy he would buy from his profits, especially in a country like Oklahoma, where cities are rather far apart and train service somewhat limited and the automobile the best medium for getting over to the Exchange center to look after bookings and such like film necessities.

We have no record of just how Blackwell received Mr. Mix, but it certainly would be with open arms. All we know is that the broncho riding star made a speech, and that the Mix film was shown and everybody was satisfied, star, manager and public, all of which is as it should be.

Blackwell is a thriving town located in the wheat belt of Oklahoma, with a big surrounding territory, threfore the city population of some 3,500 is considerably larger than these figures when theatre patrons are considered. Mr. Hartman, in owning both the Regent and Liberty, is the sole theatrical magnate of the city.

Kornblum Puts the Bloom in Film Life of Evansville

AGAIN Harry P. Kornblum of Evansville has come forward to make his Criterion theatre bloom forth as the bright and busy spot of that bustling Evansville! And, incidentally, we may add that again Mrs. Harry Kornblum has helped in the blooming!

If you know anything about moving picture affairs in Southern Indiana you know about Mr. and Mrs. Harry Kornblum. It isn't often that one speaks of "Mr. and Mrs." in connection with a theatre—but it also is not often that the "Mrs." is so clever a show-woman and so congenial a business aide as is Mrs. Kornblum.

The newest exploit of the Kornblum-Criterion family is the putting over of "The Miracle Man" for a seven-day run at the Criterion—the longest run ever attempted by that house.

Mr. Kornblum had to be out of the city before "The Miracle Man" engagement opened. So Mrs. Kornblum became first aid to the exploitation man sent to Evansville to help put over "The Miracle Man." Mrs. Kornblum knows every newspaperman in town; knows what the papers like and knows what they don't like. She lined up the advance campaign for "The Miracle Man" in a jiffy and when Mr. Kornblum returned had these little things started: A full page advertising tie-up stunt in both the Evansville Journal-News and the Press; a classified ad page stunt (Finding Honest People in Evansville) with the Courier; special feature stories in all the papers; the biggest advertising campaign ever put on in Evansville all mapped out and written; and plans for a dozen other stunts.

The Kornblums (plural) had Evansville dizzy looking at "The Miracle Man Is Coming" teaser snipes and one-sheets. Prior to the opening of the engagement the NC-4, trans-Atlantic airfliers, arrived in Evansville. Mrs. Kornblum at once arranged to have the streets leading to the wharfboats, where the airship was moored, plastered with "Miracle Man" paper; sandwich men circulated through the crowds and everything was done to get full benefit from the gathering of Evansville folk to see the air-wonder of the day. While they saw the "miracle ship" they also were reminded of the "miracle man."

Doing unusual stunts is part of the Kornblums' lives! Did you hear how they put over "Don't Change Your Husband"? For hours and hours each day, Mrs. Kornblum, aided by girl friends called up Evansville homes and simply said: "Don't change your husband." The gossip these mysterious phone calls caused was tremendous—many of those called evidently were actually thinking of changing their husbands and wondered who had learned of the fact.

Public Likes a Hint of Any Harmless Spice

So Says R. E. Pritchard, Director of Advertising and Publicity for the Allen Theatrical Enterprises of Toronto, Can.

ANYONE who has had experience in exploiting a high class theatre doesn't need to be told that his newspaper advertising must be kept as clean as the pictures shown in the theatre. I will go further and say that it must be kept cleaner—that there are times when a suggestive passage may pass the censors—we have them—but if that passage were included in the advertising there would be kept away from the theatre many who would otherwise have attended.

When I took the post of director of advertising and publicity for the great chain of theatres conducted by Messrs Jule and Jay J. Allen, I was reminded of the two precepts laid down by them and their father when they established their first theatre in Brantford, Ont., just thirteen years ago—that the patrons must be pleased no matter the trouble or expense—and that nothing but clean pictures should be shown in their theatres. They have faithfully adhered to those rules and if my advertising experience had not taught me that their correct premise was right, I would not have been tempted to infringe on such a sound rule while working in such an environment.

Yet the public does like a little suggestion of spice when it is harmless, so when we came to play Tom Moore in "Lord and Lady Algy," we decided that here we had a unique sex element to play—a case of a woman who really loved her husband and whose husband was really clean. This Goldwyn picture is a clever comedy, as all of you know, and so the thing to do was to attempt to transfer this cleverness to the advertising. It is sound reasoning that if you introduce the comedy element in your advertising, and then just leave enough untold to arouse the curiosity, you are apt to get a considerable share of newspaper readers into your theatre.

First we laid the atmosphere on the picture around the fact that this was "a story of fast horses and the English smart set." Canada had always been strong for horse racing, though it is now under the ban as the result of the war-time measures, and the interest in London society in this British dominion is natural. And while there is really a stirring race in this picture, the claim of "wonderful racing scenes" has been worked so hard that we would never dare to use it as the basis of an advertisement. But we did want the "racy" element, and so we kept this to the fore by using in each one of the daily displays a little strip showing running horses. This was one of the tail pieces of the Goldwyn press book and it came in handy.

Let me say right here that it pays to watch everything in the press books. Often you find some little thing not directly intended for your use that will service you in mighty good stead.

I have explained in previous articles that we start advertising our coming attraction on the Thursday before the opening, when we split fifty-fifty with the current attraction, reducing the current film to a few lines in the Friday and Saturday ads., then making the big splash on Sunday.

In the ordinary course of events a play centering around husband and wife is taken by the average reader to mean sex stuff, so I repeat that we made it clear that this was a clean picture—without actually saying so. Therefore we laid the basic element for the exploitation in our first ad when we showed a scene of Algy recording a bet with his wife and the simple line "Husband against wife on a horse race." This was distinctly a "teaser" meaning to center interest on our subsequent displays.

For the Friday ad. we could not risk the temptation of using the scene showing the married woman in Lord Algy's apartment, and with it the caption "Just a foolish little wife (of another) looking for romance." But we did not take chances of this situation carrying any improper idea, except spice, if that is improper, for we added: "Its not a sex play, but a clever comedy of racing and the English smart set."

Saturday we kept the same "little wife" in the ad. and showed the scene where Lady Algy enters, with the caption "Just then his wife walked in." But any wrong impression that this might have carried was removed by the matter prominently displayed in the circle—"And all she said was 'Pickles.' Such a wife!" Again we repeated that this was a comedy.

Our ads in the so-called Sunday issues (actually distributed Saturday evening) have to be general, because they are seen by so many who do not see the daily papers. So in this one we used a figure of Moore in hunting garb and a racing scene, and called it "A comedy of fast horses and the English smart set" as before referred to, and then said that it was an amazing comedy of married life in the selling argument below.

Then on Monday and Tuesday we played the husband and wife element against, first with the scene of the couple together, and the catch line, "She loved him so much that she left him," and Tuesday with the figure of Moore, and the line, "He loved horses and beautiful women, but his wife more than them all." Wednesday we reverted once more to the "little wife," by showing a scene of her and Algy seated, and the caption, "It was funny until hubby and his wife walked in." Again this was done to get the attention, and again we took away any possible shock by adding, "But she was an amazing wife in this comedy of racing and the English smart set."

For the parting shot on Thursday we were content with laughing figures of the two and the phrase "If you missed it, you're shy a part of the joy of life". We were confident that by this time the newspaper displays and the picture itself had excited sufficient word of mouth advertising and we were content to help it along.

We never use a lot of words in our advertising for we are distinctly of the belief that if you give a suggestion of the story, or of a situation in the illustration and in a few lines you have at once indicated the character of the story and have excited the greatest amount of curiosity about a picture. We always strive never to give the wrong impression of a production, but we are equally as opposed to "telling the story."

IF YOU MISSED IT, YOU'RE SHY A PART OF THE JOY OF LIFE -

"Situation" advertising's worth must of course depend on the sort of stills that you have. Meaningless ones will make your displays inane, but expressive ones require only a sentence or so to make them fraught with interest. This is best shown with the buzzes of comment we heard in the theatre during the showing of the picture when some incident that we had illustrated came on the scene. That was particularly true of the Saturday advertisement in which we had the wife saying "Pickles". But there's a warning here, too, Don't use this sort of advertising unless you see the picture first. We are only too, too familiar with the practise of some producers sending our "stills" that are not in the picture themselves. Never show a scene that the audience will not immediately recognize.

But we started in to commenting on turning the sex element of this picture. Any time you can take any of the ordinary situations of pictures and give them a different meaning you are bound to appeal to vast portion of people who are looking for "something new". We do not believe that any considerable portion of theatre patrons are looking for real smut in pictures, but we do believe that they like a certain dash of harmless spice. Thank heaven the days of the "wronged gal" stuff are passing from the screen, but the public likes a drama where it is let in on the inside and knows from the start that there is nothing wrong, but at the same time can enjoy the discomfiture or even problems of some of the characters. When you can reflect that in your advertising you are getting the interest, but be mighty sure to tread lightly on the sex element unless you put the suggestion of a laugh behind it.

These little lines we used and the little strips of running horses gave the advertising a certain sort of flavor. The people knew just about what to expect but the edge was not taken off their enjoyment.

Work the theme hard without revealing how it comes out, but keep it clean as possible. Let one event in the picture stand out, and if it leaves too strong an impression, after it has served the purpose of getting the eye, qualify it. These are the things that we tried to do in exploiting "Lord and Lady Algy". We do not believe it could have given the slightest possible offense to anyone, yet it had a certain amount of dash—and appeal to all, no matter which way their minds might choose to turn. And every line of it was truthful advertising—the sort that lets the patron leave the theatre satisfied that he has seen just what he was promised.

Kornbloom Puts the Bloom in Evansville

Another stunt of the Criterion was to circumvent the city ordinance forbidding any sidewalk advertising. It was snowing like the dickens. Drifts were piled high in the street. The Kornblums had "Reaching for the Moon" as its coming attraction. How could they advertise it with the sidewalks banked four feet in snow drifts? Presto! Kornblum had a number of small signs made, saying "Reaching for the Moon" and tacked onto sticks. That night (about 1 a. m.) he and Mrs. Kornblum went through the downtown district with the signs and stuck them in the tops of the snow drifts. The next morning everybody laughed as they saw the snow "Reaching for the Moon."

Dismisses Congregation to See "The Miracle Man"

IN addition to making big money for exhibitors, "The Miracle Man," George Loane Tucker's masterpiece, is accomplishing something else, the value of which should not be underestimated by moving picture interests. This picture is enlisting the favorable interest of the pulpit as has no other dramatic production in years.

A striking instance of the fine support being given this picture by the clergy was that which occurred in Springfield, Ohio, during the engagement of "The Miracle Man" at the Majestic theatre.

The Rev. Isadore Tedesche, rabbi of the Springfield Synagogue, and one of the most popular clergymen in that city, had seen the picture in Cincinnati before it was shown in Springfield. He returned to his pulpit filled with inspiration and enthusiasm. He preached a sermon on the picture and declared that every person in Springfield must see it, and that when it arrived in Springfield he would gladly dismiss his congregation and dispense with his own sermon, so his flock could go to the theatre to see the silent sermon of "The Miracle Man."

When the photoplay did arrive at the Majestic, Springfield, Dr. Tedesche kept his word. He again preached on the picture and told his congregation that he would excuse anyone present who had not seen the picture, and urged them to leave the synagogue and attend the picture theatre. His action attracted widespread attention, because Dr. Tedesche is known in Springfield as anything but a radical member of the clergy.

Getting the News Idea Into Your Exploitation

Successful Publicity Is Getting Something Unusual Into Your Campaign, Says Vance

A SIMPLE definition of what will make a successful exploitation campaign for a production and an almost positive method for determining what forms of stunts or unique advertising will bring record patronage are provided by William Vance, manager of the New Lyric theatre in Minneapolis, in his description of the things he did recently which have proved the soundness of his theories.

"The successful exploitation campaign is the result of the same thing that makes a startling newspaper story—something different, or, in common terms, that which is news because it is new," declares Mr. Vance.

With J. L. Johnston, advertising manager of the theatres controlled by Ruben and Finkelstein, in charge of newspaper copy and Mr. Vance supervising the lobby display and stunt work, the Lyric manager proceeded to test his theory that an exploitation campaign that is "news" in that it is "new" and sufficiently different to pique curiosity and arouse attention, can safely be predicted in advance as a real success.

The imprint of wild animal tracks across the pages of the daily newspapers, transformation of the lobby into a realistic likeness of a trapper's cabin and an extensive billboard advertising campaign made up the aggregate of effort to advertise the Nell Shipman attraction.

The advertising planned by Johnston carried a striking appeal and stood out in bold relief from other more or less commonplace ads of the local merchants appearing in the papers. His ads were different, because they contained real "news" value.

They were rivalled only in the unique lobby display arranged by Mr. Vance. The lobby was turned into a startling imitation of a real trapper's cabin of the north.

Skins of wild animals, three deer heads, a hunting bag, snowshoes and other equipment of the northern woodsman adorned the walls. The box office itself was made to represent the fireplace within the cabin. Hanging on the side of the fireplace were bear traps, wolf traps and traps of many other varieties. Beside the box office window a wise looking owl (stuffed) watched the theatre patrons as they lined up to pass their money through the little opening in the ticket seller's cage.

The atmosphere of the frozen north was well caught and its presentation came at the psychological time, for simultaneous with the showing of "Back to God's Country" Minneapolis experienced its first snowstorm of the season.

The snow and cold, however, proved no bar to the success of the picture, for the fans came out anyway, lured by the novel exploitation.

Minnesota is a veritable paradise for winter sports and for game of many varieties; it is the home of many hunters and sportsmen and consequently the picture struck a happy chord in the heart of many.

A special children's matinee was given at the New Lyric Saturday at 10 a. m., when a well filled house of youngsters and educators viewed the film which presented so many interesting and educational scenes of the timbered wilds and the Arctic. Two hundred Minneapolis teachers, especially invited guests, enjoyed the performance. Invitations admitting the recipients free to the showing were sent to all Minneapolis teachers of geography and natural history. Many of the teachers came to the theatre with a good percentage of their classes, all the members of whom paid the regular admission.

Bills the Title of the Picture Above Chaplin. Is He Correct?

WE are willing to gamble that nine out of ten exhibitors and publicity men will say that the management of the Majestic Garden theatre of Grand Rapids, Mich, is dead wrong in the publicity angle adopted in billing the title of a Chaplin film over the star, as was done at the above named house in the case of "The Floorwalker," but here is documentary proof of the fact that the Majestic did a whale of a business following out this idea, so where does our argument go?

The way the Majestic of Grand Rapids advertised "The Floor Walker" and the crowd waiting to get in at a second show

There is, however, something further to be considered in the case of this particular film, since of all the pictures which Chaplin has made, probably none are so well known for themselves alone as "The Floorwalker."

Billing this picture may be compared to billing David Warfield in "The Music Master." You might, with perfect advertising propriety, say "The Music Master" with David Warfield since this play has become associated with this distinguished actor solely.

However we think most showmen would bill both title and star even if it is orthodox by putting up their headlines as follows: Charlie Chaplin in "The Floorwalker."

Here is a chance for an argument. Who wants to argue?

Novel Card Advertises "Poor Relations"

AS advance advertising for "Poor Relations" which was played last week at Clunes Broadway theatre, Los Angeles, a card stating that "Your Poor Relations" are coming to meet you at Clunes Broadway with illustrations of two young people, one pair dressed as rustics and the other in the height of fashion, on each end of the card, was sent out to members of a big mailing list the theatre has compiled. The novelty of the card and the neatness of the printing job made the stunt one which we should judge will be effective advertising.

Home Town Girl in Aeroplane Advertises "Soldiers of Fortune"

IT was her first flight in the ar, but she chalked up a non-stop record at the box office of her home town picture theatre.

Messrs. Ney and Bernower, owners of the Alhambra theatre, Canton, Ohio, are congratulating each other and also Miss Gretchen Groetzinger, society editor of the Canton Repository, for the success of one of the biggest publicity stunts in the history of their city.

These live-wire Ohio exhibitors had signed up for "Soldiers of Fortune," an Allan Dwan Production, and the unusual exploitation methods adopted, including full-page advertising in newspapers and an aeroplane flight over the city and the surrounding countryside.

The full-page advertising run in the Canton newspapers was rather unusual in that there was no attempt to laud "Soldiers of Fortune." Here is the argument used:

"The new Capitol theatre in New York is the largest theatre in the world. It opened October 29, 1919. It seats five thousand four hundred people. It cost three million dollars. It has Arthur Pryor's Band of seventy pieces. It has Ned Wayburn's Girl Review of seventy-five people. It charges up to one dollar and fifty cents. It shows for the week commencing Sunday, Nov. 23, Richard Harding Davis' 'Soldiers of Fortune.'"

Then in display type comes the punch of the advertisement:

"So do we on the same date for 25 and 30 cents."

"Note: A raise of price of only 5 cents, as this is the most expensive picture ever brought to this city."

But it was the aeroplane flight that capped the climax of the exploitation campaign. An aviator was engaged and Miss Groetzinger, one of the most popular young women of the city, was induced to ride with the pilot and scatter "Soldier of Fortune" handbills from the clouds.

Miss Groetzinger was in the air for fifty minutes and in that time covered territory around Canton, Oberlin, Louisville and East Canton, dropping more than ten thousand heralds.

Not only did the flight occupy the interest and attention of the inhabitants along the route, but newspapers had representatives on the flying field. Many photographs were taken and these were run with feature stories in the papers. A motion picture camera was brought to the grounds and about 175 feet of negative was shot. By means of this unusual idea the feature picture of the Alhambra theatre got an unprecedented amount of publicity from many sources.

Messrs. Ney and Bernower, at only slight cost, have made a name for themselves and their Alhambra theatre in Canton and surrounding Ohio cities. In addition they showed what could be done with such excellent exploitation material as "Soldiers of Fortune," and in doing it they shattered all previous records at their house.

Live-wire exhibitors? We'll say so!

Contradictory Arguments on the "Teaser" Method

YOU never find any clubs under the apple tree which bears no fruit, so R. E. Pritchard, director of publicity and advertising for the Allen Theatrical Enterprises of Toronto, Can., whose contention that the teaser form of advertising is only advisable on a light or humorous subject, and which is being made the subject of contradictory arguments in these columns by the experience of such good showmen as Tom Moore and S. Barret McCormick, need not be disturbed in mind or think less of his theory. Pritchard as you will remember alibied himself by saying there must be a real idea back of the teaser method.

In the foregoing is an illustration of using the "teaser method" successfully which we believe will prove interesting to those who study the science of the newspaper display.

The exact science of a successful teaser ad campaign has been given a demonstration by S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theatre at Indianapolis, who proved conclusively that an exhibitor in his own way may be just as important a factor in the making of a new star as the producer, director or anyone else connected with the motion picture industry.

By the application of this science he has created popularity for a new star in Indianapolis. In fact, he "made" that star as far as the Indiana city is concerned, for that community knew little about Katherine MacDonald until McCormick excited the public's interest by his methods.

Mr. McCormick confined his exploitation campaign for "The Thunderbolt" strictly to the newspapers and started out with a teaser ad, a reproduction of which is being used in "Your Idea and Ours." He based his exploitation theory that the whole world is interested in a beautiful woman. The first advertisements to appear contained only an illustration of a beautiful American Beauty rose with an announcement that a wonderful new star, who would be styled "The American Beauty," was coming to the Circle the next week.

These curious advertisements soon had all Indianapolis discussing the possible identity of the new star. A day or two later the Circle's advertisements contained a picture of Miss MacDonald, with the opened American Beauty rose as the background. In these ads she was introduced as "The American Beauty," the wonderful new star to appear next week at the Circle.

The teasers having accomplished Mr. McCormick's desire, that of arousing the theatregoers' curiosity, he based his subsequent advertising on the merits of the picture, using direct quotations and illustrations from the story. However, in each advertisement he used a picture of Miss MacDonald surrounded by the petals of the rose, in order to immediately connect the readers with the teaser campaign previously carried out. The star's name was played up prominently in each succeeding advertisement.

Results of this scientific campaign were registered from the start of the engagement until the end. The Circle was packed on Sunday from the time it opened until the box office was closed at night, and similar conditions prevailed for the balance of the week.

Charters Flat Car for Picture Exploitation

IT isn't so long since the South was looked on as rich field for the experienced Northern picture men, and had a general reputation of not going in strong for exploitation living sort of on the "let 'em run themselves" list.

While there may be some cities south of the M. and D. line which could stand a little injection of energy, which might suggest that there are some up North too, we are of the opinion that Charlotte, N. C., is not one of them. Last week we told you how manager Craver of the above named city put over "Back to God's Country." This week we have for you a pertinent illustration of the fact that Mr. Craver has a real rival in showmanship in the person of Harry Somerville, manager of the Strand theatre. In fact it looks as if perhaps competition was pretty keen in Charlotte and that both managers are up and stirring to put over something good to help business for their particular house.

Anyway manager Sommerville's latest stunt is too charter an advertising car owned by the Charlotte railway, all by his lonesome and after painting it up for his Monroe Salisbury showing, "The Light of Victory," send it over every mile of street railway track in Charlotte, with a big bell inside the car banging away to attract attention.

Sommerville obtained the use of this flat car for a song—compared to what he might have spent in billboards, and newspapers. He tried this out recently and heard so much comment on his novel picture exploitation stunt he has stated that at regular intervals he will employ this means of boosting his house.

Clancy of Hartford Gets Away with a New One

The Story of How a Manager Pulled a Stunt That Won Pages of Free Space

THIS is a story which reaches the printed page somewhat late owing to printing troubles now a thing of the past. From a news angle it is perhaps passe. From the exploitation standpoint it is as good as ever and that is the thing the Service Bureau is interested in.

In the presence of a crowd of 20,000 persons which taxed the seating and standing accommodations of Colt's Park, the city of Hartford, Conn., paid a unique honor to the popularity of Douglas Fairbanks Sunday, September 14, by conducting a big athletic carnival, which it officially designated as "Douglas Fairbanks' Day."

Before Richard J. Kinsella, mayor of Hartford, and a score of city officials a new bicycle track which the Hartford Park Commission had just completed was formally opened with a twenty-mile race open to riders of Connecticut and which was down on the day's program as "Douglas Fairbanks' Twenty-Mile Handicap."

The reader has no doubt began to wonder by this time what "Doug" ever did to merit such signal honors from the city which claims among other things the proud distinction of being the insurance centre of these United States. As a matter of fact "Doug" is no better known to the citizens of Hartford than a score of other towns and distributed between Maine and 'Frisco.

One of the chain of theatres operated by S. Z. Poli in New England is the Palace at Hartford, whose manager is J. F. Clancy a wide-awake individual who in addition to having a pretty intimate knowledge of show business appreciates the value of good publicity. Years ago Clancy himsed used to grind out copy in the city room of several big newspapers. One evening a chap who guides the destinies of the Amateur Athletic Union in the state of Connecticut called upon Clancy for a contribution in the form of some prize to be contested for at one of the athletic events which the A. A. U. had been running every Sunday at Colt's Park under city supervision.

Doug Gives Prizes for Local Races

Douglas Fairbanks is the donor of the prizes to be awarded in the bicycle races at Colt park Sunday, August 31. Following is a reproduction of his letter to Manager Clancy of the Palace theater:

Douglas Fairbanks

Hollywood, California, August 12th, 1919.

Mr. J. F. Clancy,
Manager Palace Theatre,
Hartford, Conn.

My Dear Clancy:

In response to your telegram of yesterday, I am happy indeed to offer a silver loving cup, a gold medal, a silver medal and two bronze medals for the bicycle races to be held at Colt Park, Sunday, August 31st, under the auspices of the Connecticut Valley Association.

I thank you sincerely for the honor you have bestowed on me in calling your twenty-mile open New England Handicap the Douglas Fairbanks Handicap, and wish that I could be with you the afternoon of the races.

Please assure Mr. De Ridder that I appreciate his kind invitation to act as starter on Sunday afternoon, but that I am so busy out here at Hollywood that I don't believe that I can possibly get East for a number of months.

May I congratulate the officers of the Connecticut Valley Association and yourself for the promotion of amateur sports in your city. I need not tell you of my own interest in outdoor sports and nothing would please me better than to be able to hop on a bike and start out after the bunch myself.

I thank you again for your kind invitation. The best of luck to you and my good wishes to every one of the participants in the race, whether he wins or loses.

Sincerely yours,
Douglas Fairbanks

STARTERS IN THE DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS 20-MILE H ANDICAP BICYCLE RACE, TO BE RUN SUNDAY AT COLT PARK

Reproduction of a cut used by the Hartford Curant to illustrate its story of the field day held in the city and the "loving cup" race

Mr. Clancy was not long in seeing the point. He got into communication with Paul Lazarus of the United Artists' New York offices and between the two the whole matter was arranged. A letter which is herewith appended and self explanatory was published in all of the Hartford newspapers.

The same afternoon a well-known Hartford jeweler carried a window display which consisted of a large silver cup and four medals along with a couple of large photographs of Doug and a neatly painted card which announced "that these prizes had been donated for a twenty-mile bicycle handicap to be held at Colt's Park by Douglas Fairbanks, who would shortly be seen at the Palace in his latest picture 'His Majesty the American.'

No city in America does more for clean sport than Hartford. Its recreation centres, public golf links, tennis courts and base ball diamonds have achieved a national reputation. With the announcement that Fairbanks had donated a group of prizes interest among the sporting fraternity was soon aroused. The Park Board became interested and the superintendent of parks agreed to bank the bicycle track at angle of forty-five degrees in order to permit a faster race and at the same time insure the safety of the riders.

Mayor Kinsella, who during his term of office has been an earnest advocate of clean sport sanctioned the meet and then left for a two weeks' vacation. The acting mayor fearing that a public race meet on Sunday under city auspices might offend some of the "church people" notified the officials of the A. A. U. that he would not permit any races where prizes were to be given with the result that the District Attorney was appealed to and while the pair argued back and forth regarding the legal status of an athletic carnival on Sunday the affair received from the Hartford newspapers columns of unexpected publicity.

The carnival was originally scheduled for Sunday, August 31, and with the crowd assembled a thunder storm broke, making a postponement necessary. The following Sunday in the presence of a tremendous crowd the carnival was held. The Fairbanks' Handicap started with twenty entries. With but two more laps to go one of the riders who claimed to have been "pocketed" withdrew and when the riders passed him again on the final lap he deliberately threw his wheel in front of the bunch causing a spill in which all of the leaders were pretty badly shook up. The result, the officials declared the race had to be run over again. More publicity.

On Sunday, September 14, the riders toed the scratch for the third time in the presence of the largest crowd the park ever held. Mayor Kinsella seeing the interest that the public was displaying ordered the park commissioners to supply a band. The trolley company ran extra cars and every car in the city carried a one-half sheet card on the front fender which read "Fairbanks Day Colt's Park." The race was run and the following Tuesday night the riders assembled on the stage of the Palace Theatre where they were presented by Mayor Kinsella with the prizes "so generously donated in the interests of clean sport by Douglas Fairbanks."

All of which goes to prove that free publicity, the very best kind of free publicity can be obtained. It is probable that few exhibitors were accorded such an opportunity on "His Majesty The American," but the moral of the story is to be found in the fact that Manager Clancy simply took advantage of an opportunity which came his way. There are other opportunities of a like nature which can be utilized if only the exhibitor recognizes his chances when they appear.

The most attractive lobby display we have seen for "Back to God's Country." Arranged by G. E. Braddock, managing director of the New Liberty theatre, St. Paul, Minn.

This Is the Forest Primeval Idea in Lobby Display

THE Twin Cities, St. Paul and Minneapolis, the home of the best in motion picture presentation.

At St. Paul, Managing Director G. E. Braddock of the New Liberty, one of the Finkelstein and Ruben houses, goes in for elaborate lobby displays and prologues.

At his recent showing of "Back to God's Country," Mr. Braddock evolved what we think is the best prologue setting yet to come to our hands, and which is especially commendable, since this is a picture which has had a lot of unusual exploitation along this line.

Used as a prelude to the screening of the picture, Mr. Braddock got some effects that register as immense.

The pine woods, a natural waterfall, two black bears, owls in the trees and all the denizens of the forest were present and added to the realism of a very fine scenic back drop typical of the atmosphere of the picture.

The New Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, also had an elaborate prologue setting, but Mr. Braddock went the New Lyric executive one better, by using falling "snow" and lighting his stage effectively. He also sprayed the interior of the theatre with cedar oil which gave the house the odor of the pine forest. These effects brought forth many compliments from the New Liberty patrons.

Koehler Scores Hit in Presentation of "Red Lantern"

UNDER the above caption the Colorado Springs (Col.) Gazette recently gave manager Joe. Koehler of the Burns theatre, some front page publicity which demonstrates another angle of gain from the use of the lobby display or any other unusual exploitation stunt which may be utilized if one goes about it right.

Anything unusual is news to the newspaper and as such gets a place in the news columns, no matter if primarily the unusual thing was advertising. Consequently manager Koehler in this case can deduct a certain amount from the expense of building his lobby display and charge it to his newspaper advertising appropriation.

"The Red Lantern," featuring Nazimova, at the Burns theater this week has attracted nearly as much attention in Colorado Springs, because of the colorful scheme of decoration employed by Manager Joe Koehler as because of the intrinsic value of the film itself.

Mr. Koehler has gone to considerable expense in preparing for the production of the photoplay here and has employed great ingenuity in decorations for the entrance and foyer of the theater. Chinese effect is obtained by lanterns and flood lights in front of the theater, while in the lobby opposite the box office is a Chinese altar from which burning incense introduces the theater-goer to a subtly oriental atmosphere. Numerous tiny statues of Chinese gods complete the effect, with a ticket taker garbed in the flowing costume of a mandarin.

A representative of the Metro Picture corporation, here yesterday, expressed surprise that such preparation for the exhibition of a photoplay should be made in a city of the size of Colorado Springs. It compared favorably with the decorations of theaters in New York, Chicago and San Francisco, he declared.

"Better Times" Continue to Flourish

"BETTER TIMES" the Zazu Pitts feature still continues to get unusual exploitation at most of its engagements. One of the latest successful campaigns is that given the feature by Manager Tarbor of the Grand Opera House, Denver.

To advertise the production Denver was pasted with door hangers entitled "Better Times". Manager Vickaroy over night sent fifty boys in various parts of the city and literally awakened everyone with the door knock. In addition to this advertising feature large space in the Denver papers was used for display and was backed by a wealth of publicity containing interviews from the prominent men in the city.

Two sixty foot banners stretched across the principal streets of Denver with the inscription "Better Times Coming" gained wide-spread publicity for the picture.

Philadelphia Orphans Have a Party

FIFTY little shavers of Philadelphia, inmates of an orphan asylum, cast their "jinx" overboard on Thanksgiving Day and went to see "Jinx," the Mabel Normand circus picture at the Capitol theatre, as guests of the management. The children journeyed to the theatre from the Home by specially engaged taxicabs placarded with "Jinx" signs, as will be noted in the accompanying illustration.

The stunt received front page mention in the Philadelphia Record and brought the Capitol theatre and the "Jinx" showing a lot of free publicity.

The Capitol began its "Jinx" advertising some time before the picture opened, distributing about 25,000 "cats-heads" as souvenirs on Hallowe'en night. The heads were placed in hotels and cafes and at the Bingham Hotel a special "Jinx" cabaret act was staged.

Manager Koch Admitted "He" Men Free

Novel Exploitation Stunt for "Six Feet Four" Used at Minneapolis

EXPLOITATION extraordinary, coupled with the personal guarantee has set some new records for the New Aster theatre, Minneapolis and started all the residents of the Twin Cities talking about Manager Koch and his unique idea in advertising William Russell's picture, "Six Feet Four."

The picture's plot has a lot to do with the "he" man idea and it was in this that Manager Koch decided to make his bid for publicity.

He hired a good big broadshouldered man mounted him on stilts and sent him parading the streets bearing fore and aft a banner proclaiming the coming of the tall hero, Bill Russell in his latest photodrama. Posters announced that all who measured up to six feet four inches would be admitted to the New Aster free.

All this was a week before the opening of the film at the New Aster, and gave the showing a good publicity start.

A humorous incident occurred during the run, when a deep-voiced Goliath boomed indignantly to the box-office clerk. "Where d'you get that stuff, makin' all this holler about six feet four? I'm six feet nine!" Needless to say, he was granted free admission and was escorted to his seat by Manager Koch himself.

The New Aster's lobby was Manager Koch's trump card. It was unique, tasty and different from any of the stunts which had ever been pulled in Minneapolis. On each side of the box-office stood measuring rods, approximately six feet four in height, by which all applicants for free admission were measured. A novelty cut-out from the 24-sheet poster, showing Vola Vale demonstrating Bill Russell's claim to the inches of the title, attracted attention on one side of the lobby, and good action pictures were conspicuously placed. A one-sheet reproducing in longhand the manager's personal guarantee was posted beneath the box-office. It offered to refund the admission price to any who could not consciously O. K. Manager Koch's statement that "SIX FEET FOUR" was the best western picture produced in the last three years. Mr. Koch announced in one of his two column ads that after a four days' run not one single soul had claimed a refund.

"Male and Female" Monopolizing the News Pages of Ohio Papers

THROUGH the efforts of the exploitation department of the Famous Players-Lasky Cincinnati Exchange, "Male and Female" is getting a lot of free advertising, which is not only helping the first run houses in putting over the feature, but will extend down the line and help popularize the picture with the public as it comes to the smaller theatres.

Entire credit for getting so much free space can not go entirely to the exploitation experts, however, since the unusually attractive "stills" are an important factor in getting editorial attention for the attraction. Many of the Ohio papers are illustrating feature stories with elaborate layouts of illustrations taken from the "stills."

The Dayton, O., News on Nov. 16 used more than a half page feature to lead off its Magazine Section on "Male and Female," describing how De Mille constructed a tropical isle upon which to stage the much discussed Barrie story. Eye-arresting photographs of Gloria Swanson illustrated the article. On the same day—by coincidence—the Dayton, Ohio, Journal devoted nearly an entire page to "Spending a Day with Gloria Swanson," illustrating the supposedly many changes of costume of Miss Swanson, from her arising at 11 a. m. to retiring at —? The cuts were made from "Male and Female" stills.

Incidentally the Dayton News feature will be run in the several newspapers affiliated with that publication, including the Springfield, Ohio, News.

The Cincinnati Post is now running a seven-day feature on "Male and Female," describing the gowns worn by Miss Swanson in the picture, one each day, and illustrating each with a large reproduction of the "stills."

The Rivoli theatre of Columbia, S. C., comes through with a new idea for advertising Mary Pickford in "Heart o' the Hills," as will be seen in the above cut

Brown Appropriates Public Square and Stages Masque Dance

THIS is a sermon for the man who "says it can't be done," when you mention something out of the ordinary in exploitation, especially something which requires the active help of the public.

It is the story of how Caldwell Brown who manages the Liberty theatre of Zanesville, O., pulled some stunts that brought him real publicity and along with them real dollars in profit.

But we will let Mr. Brown tell the story himself:

"If there was a person who did not know that 'Up Stairs and Down' was in town on our engagement at the Liberty, he must have been deaf, dumb and blind," says Mr. Brown in discussing the engagement of the Olive Thomas film at his house.

"When I booked the picture I determined to get out of the usual run of advertising and put on some stunts which would make the populace sit up and take notice. A week before the showing we started things with a teaser campaign, using the newspapers, automobile stickers, and other forms of curiosity-stimulators. Then we enlisted the aid of one of the leading Zanesville dailies and put on an 'Olive Thomas Resemblance Contest.' All the town beauties in Zanesville who thought they in any way resembled the star were asked to send in their pictures in competition for a beautiful loving cup, which was kept on display at a local jewelry store. As a result every baby vamp in the city sent in a photograph, and we secured space in the paper which no amount of money could have purchased. Then we got in touch with the drug stores and sundae parlors in town, and had them put on special 'Olive Thomas Upstairs and Down' sundaes and sodas. We also secured the co-operation of the department stores in the sale of 'Upstairs and Down' music, and they gladly consented to put in big window displays. Then came our biggest stunt, an 'Upstairs and Down' masque dance. We secured the consent of the town officials to rope off the entire square in front of the Court House, where two large jazz bands furnished music for the dance, and about 1,000 masqued couples engaged in competition for another 'Olive Thomas Loving Cup.' Talk about crowds! If Olive Thomas herself had been on hand you couldn't have had more interest. It seemed like everybody in town came down to see that dance, and when it was all over they all wanted to see the picture. During the entire four-day run we played to capacity audiences, and our only regret was that we had to turn some of the people away.

This is suggestive of a political meeting during a hot Presidential campaign, but in reality it is a view of the interest the masque dance staged by Caldwell Brown, manager of the Liberty theatre, Zanesville, Ohio, aroused in his exploitation of "Upstairs and Down"

Mary Pickford on a "Skate"

UNUSUAL exploitation, something new in your city can always be counted upon to produce results. And it is not always the most expensive or complicated idea which gets head-line attention. Often the simple little stunt accomplishes the trick as is illustrated in the following story of how, using one of the incidents in a picture as a basis of an advertising medium, will recommend itself to every live exhibitor.

L. T. Lester, manager of the Rivoli theatre, Columbia, S. C., is the originator of this distinct novelty in motion picture advertising and had his public lined up on the side walks watching his "donkey" parade the streets.

Mr. Lester used a cut-out from the twenty-four sheet on "Heart O' the Hills" showing Mary Pickford perched upon a donkey. This cut-out was placed on a base mounted on roller skates in such a way that by attaching a string to the bridle on the donkey, the outfit could be drawn through the street.

The figure of Mary Pickford in quaint attire, seated on a donkey, attracted great attention. During the evening performances the cut-out was kept standing in front of the theatre.

As a lobby display, Mr. Lester covered all available space with posters, using green foliage and vines to suggest the woodland effect.

Coming as it does so close to the release date of Miss Pickford's latest picture, this idea ought to be grabbed by every exhibitor who will play the feature, especially in the smaller towns where traffic will not seriously interfere with the parade of "Mary on horse back."

No expense of importance is involved. All that is needed is the 24 sheet poster, a board and the necessary roller skates.

Being a novelty there is absolutely no doubt that the stunt will attract wide attention. It is further suggested that the person who is to lead the "donkey" be costumed in the atmosphere of the picture. For instance, a boy who looks something like the youthful lover of the star in "Heart O' the Hills" would add to the effectiveness of the stunt.

Exploitation Men's Minute Book

Free Lance Exploitation Office Opens

J. HOYT CUMMINGS, who has been handling publicity for the Cleveland Universal Exchange, has opened a special motion picture exploitation office in the Lennox building, and is now available to both exchange managers and exhibitors in the territory, to lay out and execute advertising campaigns extraordinary, for feature productions. Mr. Cummings is the first to specialize in this kind of advertising in Cleveland, and is already being besieged with contracts to come into the theatre and put a picture over.

One of Mr. Cumming's recent campaigns was pulled off last week in Toledo, and caused a lot of favorable talk. The picture to be exploited was Olive Thomas in "The Spite Bride." It played at the Colonial theatre for a week, beginning Sunday, Nov. 16. But the campaign was started a whole week in advance. The preceding Sunday the Toledo Times carried a personal letter from Olive Thomas, offering four prizes of $25 each to the four best answers to the question based by the picture, "What Would You Do in Similar Circumstances?" These answers were not limited in words or diction. Prose, poetry, or any other form of expression was allowed. But the four were to be selected by Miss Thomas herself from among the many contestants.

The Cleveland Select Exchange contributed $50 toward the prizes. The Colonial theatre contributed a like amount. But these prizes were awarded in merchandise instead of in cash, thus gaining the co-operation of four of the largest retail stores in Toledo. One of the leading millinery stores devoted a whole window to a modish hat which bore a $25 price mark and a card saying, "This is the hat that goes to the winner of the Olive Thomas contest." A star photo of Olive Thomas was also conspicuously displayed in the window. This method of advertising was pursued in three other leading stores, one of them being a gentlemen's furnishing store, and the other a department store. Prizes were on display in each of these stores with announcements and photos.

This co-operation with the Toledo stores was further carried out by concerted advertising in the newspapers. One whole page was reserved in the Sunday edition of the Toledo Times. Across the top of the sheet in heavy type was "Spite Bride Stores." Then followed four quarter-page ads of the four stores involved in the contest, announcing, in addition to their wares, the fact that the prizes were on exhibition at those stores.

The pre-release advertising was also ingenuously worked out by Mr. Cummings. Instead of coming out in the papers with the whole story at one time, he first stimulated public curiosity, and then fed that curiosity bit by bit. On the opening day of the campaign, the Toledo Times carried only the personal letter from Olive Thomas, announcing her intention of giving prizes to the four who told best what they would do if placed in conditions to those similar to the ones she faced in "The Spite Bride." The following day appeared the announcement of what those prizes would be. The third day, it was announced that an additional prize of fifty pairs of seats would be awarded to other contestants, after the first four were allotted. The fourth day came the tale of where the prizes were on display. Subsequent events offered additional material so that the following days of the campaign each carried its own story.

"EXPLOITATION MEN'S MINUTE BOOK—"

GIVING Credit Where Credit Is Due. The text of the pages under this heading is devoted exclusively to the achievements of the Exchange Exploitation Men.

It places at the disposal of the exhibitor all the exploitation ideas these experts originate, renders their services practically universal and gives credit where credit is due.

Exploitation Man Plays the Fair

MANY are the stories of the shows which have played "fair dates" to big business, for it is well known that the annual agricultural event of the average county or state brings out some virgin entertainment prospects. Likewise we have known where picture houses have advertised themselves and their current bills on the fair grounds with good success, but the engagement of a booth in the fair house for the purpose of popularizing a brand of pictures is new to us, especially for the producer himself to make such reservation.

At the Louisiana State Fair held at New Orleans late this fall, the Goldwyn New Orleans Exchange men, under the direction of John H. Gihon, press and service representative, engaged space on the fair ground and fixed up a very attractive booth where courteous employees of the Exchange extolled the merits of its product to the passing throngs.

Since the State Fair in Louisiana is quite some event and the booth nicely located and well arranged, the Exchange management was well-pleased with the result. The accompanying cut will testify to the attractiveness of the booth.

Cleveland News and Hodkinson Exchange Co-operate

PUTTING over publicity in the news columns of the newspaper so it helps both newspaper and the exhibitors in the territory covered by the publication is an art, and also one of the most effective exploitation angles which can be treated upon.

As an example of what can be done is demonstrated by a recital of the experiences of W. F. Seymour, Cleveland, Ohio, representative of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, who has recently completed a most unusual co-operative advertising campaign with the Cleveland News.

The picture on which the campaign was conducted was "The Westerners," the picturization of Stewart Edward White's famous novel. Mr. Seymour secured the publishing rights to the book and made a present of these rights to the Cleveland News, one of the leading daily and Sunday newspapers in Cleveland, with the understanding that the story was to be run in novel form in the Sunday News-Leader on the Sunday preceding the opening of the picture "Westerners" at the Grand theatre, the week of October 6.

In appreciation of this gift from Mr. Seymour, the News ran its advertising campaign on both the novel and the film. On that date, the News used an insert on the front page announcing that the story, a film version of which was current, would be published the following Sunday in the News-Leader. This is space that cannot be bought for advertising purpose at any price whatsoever. But, by securing the good will of the paper, Mr. Seymour secured the most conspicuous and most valuable advertising space in the entire paper. During the week, a full page ad was carried in every edition of the paper, including baseball, extras and final. Saturday's editions carried a four-column eighteen-inch ad, as well as a three-column editorial in the same issue. The Sunday paper featured a teaser ad on the first page again, announcing where the four pages of the story of "Westerners" was to be found in the paper, as well as a half page ad in the movie section of the Grand theatre. In addition, one of the leading periodical shops down town had a big window display of the book, "Westerners," so there was no avenue left unvisited, by which the public could be informed that there was such a book and such a play as "Westerners,' 'and that the book could be had, free of charge by reading the Sunday News-Leader, and that the picture of the book could be seen at the Grand theatre.

This seems to have the most complete, the most comprehensive advertising campaign ever conducted in Cleveland on any picture. And all it cost the local Hodkinson exchange was the price of the publishing rights of the book. Maybe this was as much as it would have cost to go right in and cover the advertising material, but it was better than just buying space, because, by leaving the advertising to the judgment and discretion of the paper, it was given space in that paper which is never for sale. Front pages cannot be bought. Neither can space on a front page. But "Westerners" got front page advertising because it behooved the paper to announce its wares to the public in some manner that would be unmistakably conspicuous.

Record No. 33
By Ida Clyde Clark

Character of Story: Humorous mystery.
Theme: Coincidence.
Characters: Amelie Trent; Robert Cartwright, banker; Mr. Lawrence; Mr. Chalmers; Carter Raines; Will Channing; Professor Marville; Miss Warren; Mrs. Marville, the Professor's mother.
The Plot: Amelie Trent is an orphan in a small Southern town. A girl of good family with plenty of money to support her in comfort, though not rich. She finds her environment somewhat cramped, especially in the matter of cultural pursuits and amuses herself by studying French in phonograph record lessons. One day she puts on a record numbered 33 and instead of the usual high pitched mechanical voice beginning, "I drink coffee and my sister drinks tea," she is surprised to hear a perfectly natural masculine voice say: "I am very very tired of talking to a machine—a cold, heartless, unresponsive machine, day after day, week after week. I want to scent the jessamine and the roses and to see the glint of the Southern sun on Southern waters. I know that somewhere in the dear Southern land there is a sweet and gentle woman with a dream in her eyes and music in her voice and goodness in her soul who could bring me the only happiness I crave—home and love." This record astonishes and charms her. It seems like a friend. Her interest in the record is further enhanced when she has a letter from the president of the phonograph company asking her to return Record No. 33 and offering to supply her another in place of it. She writes that the record is satisfactory and she wishes to keep it, but her curiosity is aroused and she decides to go to New York and see the man who made it. She borrows money on her property and goes to New York where she looks up the phonograph company and discovers that a reward of $5,000 has been offered for the missing record which contains a valuable scientific formula making the voice sound perfectly natural. She denies any knowledge of this formula but the officers of the company suspect that she has the missing record and that she is simply holding out for a bigger price. They send the office girl and boy to take Amelie to dinner with the idea of surprising her secret. While they are dining in a fahionable hotel the Professor passes and is induced to stay to dinner—this is Professor Marville, the man who made the record Amelie has grown to love. Amelie and the Professor become great friends, both being Southerners and enthusiasts on all things of the South, but he is troubled by the suspicion that still obtains at the office that she has the scientific record. Finally she plays her record for him on the phonograph and it develops that this was an extra record and one which he supposed was in his own trunk. Having confessed her secret, Amelie goes home and the Professor follows her there to tell her that in her he has found that sweet and gentle woman of whom he spoke in the record.
Locale: Small town in Kentucky; New York.
Picture High Lights: This is a simple love story but could be made appealing.

Chan's Wife
By Jessie Anderson Chase

Character of Story:
Theme: Compatability.
Characters: Chandler Morton, artist; Fanny Ticknor; Heloise Lewandowska, Chan's aunt; Beryl Stainer; Tom Brinkerhoff; Sabina Morrell.
The Plot: Chandler Morton, a Boston artist, finds a very congenial companion in Fanny Ticknor, Professor of English at the University of Chicago and daughter of a clergyman. Fanny, as Chandler is about to return East, proposes marriage to him and he accepts her proposal. They are married and settle in Boston happily enough though it is a short time only before they clash more or less in the matter of house furnishings and the like. Chan is of the type which is profoundly affected by surroundings; he cannot endure furniture or bric-a-brac which offends his artistic taste. Fanny, being a person of mentality, rather than temperament, is able to adjust herself to any sort of surroundings and attaches little importance to the things which seem of vital importance to him. Chan is called to New York to paint some portraits and while he is gone Beryl Stainer comes to visit Fanny—a girl who has absorbed too much of the recently discovered age-old philosophy of the decadent Orient which seems to college students quite the newest thing going. Beryl doesn't care for physical sensations or mental exercise of any sort—she prefers to leave her soul free to roam where it will. In spite of this Chan's friend, Tom Brinkerhoff, is determined that she shall "wake up" and sets himself the task of waking her. Chan is not attracted to Beryl but while in New York meets a very wealthy and companionable girl in Sabina Morrell, who does not know that he is married and who permits herself to become interested in him for that reason. Chan does not trouble himself to mention his companionship with Sabina to Fanny and Fanny only learns of it through overhearing a conversation between Sabina and another woman at a tea when Sabina comes to Boston. Chan, learning that Sabina is in Boston, tells Fanny of her for he fears that otherwise she will hear it from someone else. Sabina, learning that Chan is married, accepts the situation and endeavors to make a friend of Fanny but only succeeds in rousing her jealousy. Fanny, who is expecting a child, encourages Chan to take a trip to Europe. Unfortunately for her peace of mind, she learns that Sabina is also in Europe—though she is there on her wedding trip, having married another artist. Chan's letters telling of further companionship with Sabina so prey on Fanny's mind that she nearly dies and temporarily becomes delirious. Sabina learning of this, rushes home and nurses her through the crisis so that when Chan arrives to greet his wife and daughter Fanny is again in a normal frame of mind and realizes that her jealousy has been unfounded that she has been torturing herself unnecessarily.
Locale: Chicago and Boston.
Picture High Lights: This is really a study of the problem which confronts the wife of an artist—can a woman love strongly and not be jealous?

The Secret House
By Edgar Wallace

Character of Story:
Theme:
Characters: Count Poltavo, gentleman adventurer; Gregory Farrington, gentleman of means; Montague Fallock, the unknown; T. B. Smith of Scotland Yard; Lady Constance Dex; Ela, another Scotland Yard man; Henri Sans, an architect; De Coasta, a go-between; Doris Gray, Farrington's ward; Frank Doughton; Dr. Fall.
The Plot: Gregory Farrington, a supposedly respectable member of London society, is secretly the owner of a weekly society sheet called "The Gossip" and employs "Count" Poltavo to act as the nominal editor of the paper. Farrington visits the offices of the paper by way of a secret entrance, with a veil over his face. Poltavo learns that the real business of his employer is blackmail—that the choicest bits of scandal sent in to the paper are not printed but the information is used to force money from the persons whose reputations are involved. This business is conducted under the name of "Montague Fallock" and the police have many complaints concerning this mysterious malefactor. Frank Doughton, who is in love with Doris, Farrington's ward, is employed by Farrington to search for the missing heir to the Tollington millions. It develops later that Doughton himself is the heir to this fortune and that for this reason Farrington desires to marry Doris to him, Farrington having spent Doris' fortune and desiring to make it up to her—the only human creature for whom he has any sort of affection—by marrying her to a man of great wealth. De Coasta and Sans, two of Farrington's tools, meet each other on the doorstep of Farrington's house where they have gone to blackmail him—having discovered that he is really Montague Fallock. Farrington hears them quarrelling and as one of them draws a pistol, he shoots through the door and kills them both. Lady Constance Dex, whom he is blackmailing, happens to be in the areaway of the house at the time but does not witness the shooting. Years before Farrington has told her finance—another Doughton—of an indiscretion of hers and Doughton has gone to Africa where Farrington did away with him. Lady Constance does not know that Farrington is the responsible party and he keeps her under his control in the hope that she will be able through him to reach Montague Fallock and secure her revenge. In a country place Farrington has erected a house known as "the secret house" in which there are all sorts of mechanical contrivances, such as rooms which move about on the same principle as an elevator, secret prisons, an electric chair and an underground railway leading to a cottage on the moor. This property is supposed to belong to an eccentric and insane American worth millions. This man is in charge of Dr. Fall. The American is supposed to be a recluse, secluded because of his affliction. As a matter of fact this is a blind and the man who poses as the American is a half-witted farmer. Farrington is tracked down to the secret house but it is, at first, not possible to prove his presence. Farrington pretends to commit suicide. Count Poltavo desires to marry Doris and plans to leave London with the ill-gotten gains of his employer. He is caught and confined in the cottage on the moor by Smith of Scotland Yard. Farrington and Falls carry him off by the underground and electrocute him in the Secret House. Smith follows, releases Lady Dex, who is confined there, and is very nearly electrocuted himself when rescued by Ela. Dougaton and Doris are married.
Locale: London and country place in England.
Picture High Lights: Full of melodramatic action.

Through Stained Glass
By George Agnew Chamberlain

Character of Story: Society drama.
Theme: Experience.
Characters: The Rev. Orme Leighton; Ann Leighton, his wife; Shenton Leighton, their son; Natalie Leighton, their daughter; Manoel, gardener; Lewis Leighton; Mammy; Lalia; the chief of police; Dom Francisco; Glendenning Leighton; Lady Helene Derl; Le Brux, sculptor; Violet Materlin; Mlle. Folly Delaires; Old Ivory.
The Plot: After the close of the Civil War the Rev. Leighton leaves his home in the South and goes to Brazil where, with his wife, he begins life anew, founding an academy which prospers. In addition to their own two children they are foster parents to Lewis Leighton, a cousin from England. The Rev. Leighton surprises the gardener, Manoel, giving liquor to his son, Shenton, and in his rage and anger, he chokes the gardener to death. Going to the chief of police to give himself up for trial he is told by the chief that he will be given time to get out of the country and he does so, taking his family with him. On the journey Shenton is taken ill with a fever and dies. The others settle down in a less populous part of Brazil. Lewis learns that it is planned that Natalie shall marry Dom Francisco, an old man, for the sake of the money that this will bring into the family, and Lewis quarrels with his foster mother and father and leaves the place at once, striking out for the seacoast. On the way he encounters a stranger who turns out to be Glendenning Leighton, Lewis' father. His father takes him home to England and afterward to Paris to study sculpture. Lewis has a talent for this. Lewis is curiously innocent and though thrown with many women of the world is in no way touched by this, but falls platonically in love with a model who is nothing more than a playmate to him. His father arranges that this attachment shall be broken up before it grows into any serious matter. Lewis hears that the Rev. Leighton has died and that the marriage which was contemplated for Natalie did not take place. He goes to Brazil to look up the Leightons but finds that they have gone to the United States. On the way from Brazil he falls in with Folly Delaires, a dancer who desires to make a conquest of him. He falls desperately in love with her and wishes to marry her. She does not wish to marry him but will not let him go. His father interferes but finally decides it is best to let matters take their course. Meeting Natalie again Lewis finds that he is also in love with her but feels bound to Folly. Accidentally he hears Folly cursing a little begger in the strongest of Cockney idioms and both she and he realize that all is over between them. Lewis then returns to Natalie at the same time that he learns of the death of his father. The underlying motive of the story is the effort of the father to shield his son from the experiences through which he has passed.
Locale: Brazil, London, New England.
Picture High Lights: The murder; the meeting of father and son.

The Man
By Edwina Levin

Character of Story: Comedy.
Theme: Babies.
Characters: John Brenton; Edna Warrick, his sister; Tom Warrick, her husband; Laura Dixon, a friend; Edward Dixon, her husband; "Billy."
The Plot: This is a comedy in which the humor consists in the efforts of a high-school boy to play the man of the world and take a hand in the affairs of the family. Young John Brenton, who lives with his sister and her husband, has been acquiring a knowledge of the world through books and when he finds some baby garments among his sister's sewing things, he proceeds to advise her that she should contemplate only beautiful objects, think beautiful thoughts and avoid losing her temper. Edna is astonished at this harrangue and when she has the opportunity demands to know what he means. He explains that these rules are laid down for the guidance of every wife who expects to be a mother. Edna declares that she is NOT a mother but the remark passes over John's head for he is not aware of the fact that Edna and Tom have been planning to adopt a baby. Edna demands information as to where John secured his knowledge of the subject and he admits that he gleaned it from a volume called "Things a Young Mother Ought to Know." Nothing more is said about the baby and John notices that Laura and Tom are having private conversations. His suspicions are arroused. He has heard of many housholds in which the happiness of a truly mated couple has been wrecked by the designs of a Vampire in the guise of a best friend. John determines that this shall not happen in his sister's home if he can help it, so he sets out to play the amateur detective. He has hard luck at first, try as he will, he cannot catch Tom and Laura in a compromising position nor collect any evidence to support his inward conviction that Laura is a natural-born home-wrecker. He has guardedly warned Edna of the danger in which she stands of losing her happiness but she does not get the drift of his remarks and so John is forced to keep on playing watch-dog over the family integrity. Finally he gets a real clue—Tom is meeting some strange man for luncheon and dinner and Tom is not dressing as Tom would ordinarily dress to meet a man. John follows Tom, after overhearing an engagement made over the telephone and finds that the strange man is not a man at all—but Laura. He is horrified but determined to secure more evidence before he breaks the terrible news to his sister. Other luncheons and even a dinner follow in rapid succession and each time Tom is heard to say at home that he has a business engagement with a man. Then John finds that Tom and Laura are concealing something from Edna—they have a guilty secret it is evident, for they whisper together in corners—whispers which cease abruptly on Edna's approach. So John tells Edna as delicately as he can what a terrible thing has happened, but she thinks he is talking of a disappointing love affair of his own! And she comforts him as one would a child. And just then Laura and Tom arrive with the baby, "Billy"—the long expected baby who could not be secured at first owing to a shortage in orphans and who is now presented to Edna as a surprise.

Comedy a la William C. De Mille—Director

WILLIAM DE MILLE has been writing and directing photoplays for the past five years. Henceforth, he will devote himself exclusively to the direction of special screen productions which will bear his name. And, insofar as Mr. De Mille is concerned, each and every one of these feature photoplays will be comedies—but comedies in the best sense of that much-misused word.

"Truth is the essential ingredient of real comedy," says Mr. De Mille. "There is an old French definition which differentiates the two forms of comedy very clearly. True comedy, says this definition, makes truth essential and laughter incidental; in farce, laughter is essential and truth incidental.

"It is the real comedy, based on truth, that I hope to do in the future.

"The decision to devote my attention to this type of comedy has been several years in the forming. I believe that the public approves of clean, humorous stories and I hope to supply a portion of this demand.

"For the initial production under this new system, I have chosen 'The Prince Chap.' To those who remember the stage play, this story needs no introduction. It is a story of whimsical charm and humor that has all of the best elements for the particular type of comedy which I have in mind.

"Comedy and pathos are never entirely divorced. It is the photoplays which combine a laugh and a half-sob in the same breath that the public likes to see and that I like to produce. 'The Prince Chap' is an example of this type in its stage form and its adaptation to the screen will serve to open wider fields for the development of its basic strain.

"Although I have not as yet determined on the production which will follow 'The Prince Chap,' I can promise that it will be of the same calibre."

Wistaria Has Big Plays for Coming Year

Burton King, director-general of Wistaria Productions, announces that the policy of the company for the coming year will embrace the filming of a number of well-known books and Broadway successes.

The first vehicle to be put into production by this company will be "Why Women Sin," a play which is widely known. Lloyd Lonergan has prepared the continuity of this script and it is now in production.

Anne Luther, who has just completed "The Lurking Peril," for the Wistaria Productions, is featured in "Why Women Sin," and in the cast which has been assembled to support her are many well known players.

"THE GAY LORD QUEX"
(GOLDWYN)

This Picture Is Just Pleasantly Entertaining

WITH English locale and aristocratic atmosphere this famous stage play by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero will undoubtedly attract the attention of high class patrons. But the picture may not register so heavily with them as they are entitled to expect for several reasons. With probably one exception (Naomi Childers) every member of the cast is off on type. They are all good artists, but the casting director miscast them.

And the director and performers have not quite caught the spirit of the story. The sets are elaborately correct and the photography is very good. Continuity shows clear sequences. There is no question about the picture being pleasantly entertaining, but its real possibilities have not been realized and brought out strongly enough to earn it the attention accorded to special attractions.

Young and gay Lord Quex loves the ladies and has so many affairs to his discredit that when he finds himself actually in love with a sweet young girl, he has a terrible time convincing her that his frivolous career is a thing of the past.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and generally pleasing; Elite, good puller and generally pleasing; Family, good puller and very pleasing; Workers, average puller and fairly pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released November 30.—Tom Hamlin.

Direction by Harry Beaumont.
Photography by Norbert Brodin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Tom Moore is scheduled for a ——— days run at the ——— theatre beginning ——— in his latest Goldwyn picture, "The Gay Lord Quex."

This is from the play by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero which had such a tremendous vogue, and Mr. Moore is supported by Gloria Hope, Naomi Childers, Hazel Daly, Kate Lester, Kathleen Kirkham, and Sydney Ainsworth.

The Marquess of Quex certainly loved the ladies. And just for that he was known throughout England as "The Gay Lord Quex." His many conquests were noted freely in society gossip and the newspapers often mentioned them. This did not bother the gay young fellow until suddenly he found himself in love with a sweet young girl

It was then that he began to repent and tried to blot out his past career. But the old ghosts seem to continually haunt him. It happened that one of his former flames, "The Duchess of Strood," visited the same house party where the young man was laying siege to the hand and heart of the sweet young ingenue.

When Muriel, the young object of Lord Quex' attentions visited her old friend, Sophie Fullgarney, the manicurist, she learned that her finance had formerly met his girls there in great numbers. And Sophie was determined that a man with such a reputation would not win her young and innocent friend.

Sophie boosted for another suitor thinking him a grand man, but secretly he was worse than Lord Quex ever dared to be. There is a great anti-claimax when the gay Lord Quex locks Sophie, the manicurist, with him in a room to argue it out. And the great climax comes later when the young Lord Quex discovers his sweet young finance in the arms of his rival, in a back room at Sophie's manicuring parlors.

But all comes out clean and nice after all and the now thoroughly subdued gay Lord Quex finally wins his great and only love.

PROGRAM READER

Tom Moore has certainly surrounded himself with a bevy of screen beauties in his latest Goldwyn picture, "The Gay Lord Quex."

Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's famous stage play calls for this and the screen version fulfills the intent of the great author.

Gloria Hope, Naomi Childers, Hazel Daly, Kate Lester and Kathleen Kirkham are the principal ladies in the group, but some of the ladies in the picture caused the gay Lord Quex so much worry and trouble that he is more to be pitied than envied.

He was a gay dog and had so many affairs with the ladies that when he finally discovered a sweet young girl whom he wanted to marry his past always arose accusingly to confront him.

The young man was not a man of low morals only he had roamed through aristocratic society unhindered and his love affairs were many. The old flames would appear when he was laying ardent siege to the young ingenue. And she loved the gay young Lord Quex, but his past was such a terrible thing to overcome. All this is pictured in the Goldwyn picture coming to this theatre next week.

Tom Moore has in "The Gay Lord Quex," one of his best screen offerings.

SUGGESTIONS

There are many ways to exploit this picture after you have booked it, but it should be done in a high class manner. The appeal is mostly for the elite as the picture is based upon a high class stage play. But you have some good names to use. The author, Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, should be mentioned by all means, and the title. "The Gay Lord Quex," is a captivating title. And then Tom Moore, the star, can be counted on to help pull them in. But don't neglect mentioning the five women in the cast and run as many photographs and cuts of the group as possible to place. The fact that Goldwyn is in the midst of a big advertising and publicity campaign should impel you to use the brand name also, "Goldwyn Pictures," on ever occasion. If you have a society list you should mail every prospective patron an announcement, using all the names as just mentioned.

CATCH LINES

He loved the ladies and just see the trouble it brought him.

"MARKED MEN"

"MARKED MEN" may be generally considered the best Harry Carey picture to date as there is a wider appeal than in any of his former productions. In the first place it possesses the rare quality of being a Western picture with a woman appeal. And the many beautiful "long shots" display expert photography.

The direction of Jack Ford is exceptionally good and a realistic sandstorm should certainly cause them to gasp. There is one star performer not mentioned in the cast, and that is the baby adopted by the three rough men of the desert. And many real thrills are injected, one of which portrays the fall of a horse and rider from a high bridge to the distant water.

Suspense has been provided by the fact that three men have escaped prison. Then they rob a bank and escape into the desert where they come across a wagon containing a mother and her newborn baby. After admonishing them to bring the child up to become as good as they are themselves she passes away. Only one of the three men survives the terrible trip to civilization with the baby. His sweetheart is waiting for him as is also the sheriff. The pardon came after the officer learns that the baby is his own niece. This is a mighty good picture.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and very pleasing; Elite, average puller and very pleasing; Family, good puller and very pleasing; Workers, big puller and exceptionally pleasing.—Length, 6 reels.—Released December 21.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Harry Carey in the Universal feature, "Marked Men," will be shown at the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

Peter Kyne wrote the story which ran in the Saturday Evening Post under the title, "The Three Godfathers." This is heralded as the best Harry Carey feature to date.

Harry and his pals are serving time in prison under suspicion of being implicated in a train robbery. A desperate attempt to break jail is effective and after a thrilling ride across country and running battles with prison guards they separate and meet again later in a Western mining camp.

In the meantime Harry has met and fallen in love with a girl whom circumstances has driven to seek employment as waitress in a dance hall. It is this girl that warns him that the Sheriff suspicions him. Then his old partners appear and plan a bank robbery. As they had previously saved his life he felt that he should help them in spite of the girl's pleading.

The robbers flee to the desert with the officers in hot pursuit. After wandering for days they come across a wagon containing a woman and a new born babe. The woman in dying requests them to be the three godfathers of the child and bring it up as good as they are themselves.

After days of sunshine and fierce sandstorms two of the men pass away and Harry manages to reach civilization again with the baby in his arms. And his girl is waiting for him, as is also the Sheriff.

But the baby saves Harry from going back to prison again. And the baby unites Harry and his sweetheart. This production is described as a thriller, and filled with romance and adventure.

According to the reviewers the women will especially like this picture. It is said to possess the essential heart interest. Jack Ford, one of the youngest directors in the business, is responsible for the production.

PROGRAM READER

It is a rare occasion when a so-called "Western" picture will take a firm grip upon the women. Ordinarily they show but passing interest.

But we have a Universal production coming to this theatre next week that is warranted to captivate the woman. And Harry Carey, the well known star of the "Great Out-Doors," has the principal role.

This picture is entitled "Marked Men" and is taken from Peter B. Kyne's Saturday Evening Post story, "The Three Godfathers."

Three rough men, pursued by officers of the law, escape to the desert. While wandering about they come across an abandoned wagon containing a woman with a new-born babe.

And when this woman in passing away delivers the baby in their charge, she admonishes them to carefully raise it so that some day it will be as good as they are themselves.

In reaching civilization, one man and the baby survive. The first person to see him was the Sheriff. The second person to catch sight of him was his sweetheart.

It looked as if he would have to go back to prison again, as he was an escaped prisoner. But he had done a heroic deed. The baby was also to be considered. And the little babe was to blame for the happiness that loomed up on future's horizon.

CATCH LINES

Where a little babe polishes three diamonds in the rough.

The mother called them good men and these three escaped convicts tried to live up to the thought.

His sweetheart and the Sheriff were waiting for him with open arms. He chose the girl and the Sheriff chose him.

"EVERYWOMAN"
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Spectacular Appeal in This Rich Production

"EVERYWOMAN," an adaptation of Walter Browne's morality play of the same name, may be put down as an artistic achievement. The lavish disregard for expense noticeable in the scenic investiture and feminine apparel makes it a sumptuous production, indeed. Its keynote of beauty, its spectacular effects, its striking pictures dominate the story and bring it forward as a feast for the eye rather than a treat for the mind. Although a morality play, its moral is not made emphatic simply because the characters labeled as symbols of life and emotions do not convey any message that is not told in any ordinary love story.

Give the symbolic folk human names and "Everywoman" would not rise above a dead level. That it does rise and offer entertainment is proven in its production, which is a credit to George Melford and his artistic perceptions. Probably it shall prove more entertaining as a photoplay than as a spoken drama because of its pictorial qualities. If it serves no other purpose than to present the screen as a medium of artistic pictorial endeavor, its creation will not have been in vain. The still small voice of sustained drama can be forgotten in this instance. The interest will be aroused in the sweep of Mr. Melford's brush as his canvas takes form. Particularly will he be appreciated in his banquet scene which is a master stroke of color and atmosphere and beauty.

The picture is interpreted by a cast that reaches all-star proportions. Violet Heming, in the character of "Everywoman," who searches for love and finds it after a series of temptations, plays with a great deal of charm and understanding. Her companions on the journey are Youth and Beauty, enacted by Clara Horton and Wanda Hawley, respectively. Irving Cummings is a villainous Passion, Theodore Roberts, a characteristic Wealth, and James Neill, a shadowy Nobody. A host of other players are seen in lesser roles. The subtitles are elaborated with designs after the fashion of statuaries. There is not a blemish in the production; it is artistic in every department.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The photoplay, "Everywoman," adapted from Walter Browne's great morality play, will appear at the———theatre beginning ———. The story has been filmed on an extremely lavish scale and abounds in beautiful settings and spectacular effects. Against this extravagent background Walter Browne's celebrated allegory of life and its temptations is acted by an extraordinary cast of players. The role of Everywoman is played by Violet Heming. Monte Blue has the part of Love, Wanda Hawley is Beauty, and Theodore Roberts is Wealth. Others in the company include Margaret Loomis as Modesty, Mildred Reardon as Conscience, Bebe Daniels as Vice, Irving Cummings as Passion, Raymond Hatton as Flattery, Noah Beery, Tully Marshall and Charles Ogle. The picture was directed by George Melford with infinite skill.

"Everywoman" is a story of Every woman's quest for Love, Wealth, Flattery, Dissipation and Passion stand in her way but her quest is finally successful. A beautiful girl is wooed by a physician, an actor and a millionaire. She is also urged to adopt a theatrical career. Everywoman is advised to go upon the Stage of Life by Flatterv to seek King Love. Her long journey leads her through many temptations until she finally reaches the humble hut of Love, who turns out to be the young physician. Scenes of striking splendor mark the picture throughout. "Everywoman" is an artistic achievement.

PROGRAM READER

Everybody has heard of "Everywoman," the celebrated morality play by Walter Browne, which scored such phenomenal success upon the stage. However great as its popularity as spoken drama has been, it has taken the screen to bring out the entertaining and spectacular values of "Everywoman" to the full. Lavish beauty is its keynote. And a cast of exceptional talent. an expert director, and an expenditure of artistic effort have been combined to produce one of the most beautiful photoplays of all times.

The pictude is a feast for the eye, but it unfolds an interest-compelling plot leading through thrilling climaxes to a happy conclusion. It is inspiring because it is the allegorical story of life itself. Violet Heming, a prominent actress of the stage and screen, plays the part of Everywoman. She is supported by Theodore Roberts as Wealth, Irving Cummings as Passion, Wanda Hawley as Beauty, Monte Blue as Love and many others. "Everywoman" will be at this theatre next ———.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is an artistic production which needs to be exploited as a beauty show. Make the most of the play, that it is an adaptation of Walter Browne's celebrated morality story which had phenomenal success upon the stage. Tell that an all star cast has been selected and feature their names. Make mention of the marvelously beautiful gowns worn by the feminine players. Treat this picture with the utmost dignity, not only in your newspaper exploitation but in your teaser campaign, your circular letter campaign, and in your decorative scheme for the theatre. Tell that the story describes every woman's search for love and that she finds it after severe temptations.

"JINX"
(GOLDWYN)

Mabel Normand Appears in Eccentric Comedy

HERE is the old time Mabel Normand—the Mabel of the Keystone "lots" appearing in a veritable pepperpot of eccentric comedy hot off the griddle. While the picture unfolds an idea which is held together with melodramatic and humorous threads, this angle will be overlooked by the average spectator providing he is one of Mabel's devotees. He will be interested only in the comedienne's antics. Her tricks, her expressions, her clothes all bring back memories of the time when she appeared with Chaplin. It is a circus story, is "Jinx," and naturally it offers a rich quota of action—but action which has to do with life back of the tents and pertaining to the freaks rather than in the show itself.

To detail the plot would be presenting nothing out of the ordinary. On close inspection it offers a romance between a couple of freaks with enough conflict generated to make their happiness a thing of hope rather than reality until the conclusion. She is little Miss Ragamuffin and Cinderella rolled into one. And she is called the Jinx because of the hard luck she brings her associates. The youth who impersonates the "wild man" has faith in her and eventually finds out that she brings good luck as far as he is concerned. It is Mabel Normand's picture any way you look at it. With any one else attempting to interpret the "wild harumscarum" the picture would hardly pass muster.

The story will not bear analysis regarding its plot. Its ingredients are quite moth-eaten. But the stunts brighten it and uplift it. Miss Normand is ridiculously funny when she attempts to save the show by appearing in the serpentine dancer's role, and when she puts on a circus of her own and walks a slack wire and performs somersaults. And her eccentricities are emphasized by her grotesque clothes. The support she receives from Cullen Landis, Florence Carpenter, and others is entirely acceptable.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mabel Normand, the Goldwyn comedienne, will appear at the———theatre next ——— in her latest photoplay entitled "Jinx." This story is by Shannon Fife, the well known scenario writer, and it affords the star a role which brings out her funmaking talents splendidly. The plot concerns an orphaned circus waif known as Jinx because she has supposedly brought hard luck to the traveling showpeople. Her forlorn plight, her ignorance, and awkwardness, and her kindly heart plunge the Jinx into situations which are highly ludicrous and full of novel comedy. When the circus folk strike and desert the almost bankrupt show, the Jinx, because she feels responsible for the catastrophe, tries to keep the performance going by taking the place of the serpentine dancer.

This is the final calamity as the Jinx cannot dance. She is pursued by an irate manager and finds refuge in an orphans' home. where happiness is found. Her own true Slicker, after an untiring search, finds his little companion of the circus and takes her to his heart. This is a story fraught with any number of humorous moments and contains a sustaining quality of melodrama so that the interest is never lost. It carries a strong note of sympathy and heart interest too.

Miss Normand is constantly the center of attention in "Jinx." Her tricks and her business are refreshing and amusing and she carries the action through to a most successful finish. Her companion funmakers in "Iinx" are Cullen Landis, Florence Carnenter. Gertrude Claire. Ogden Crane and Clarence Arper. Victor L. Schertzinger directed the picture.

PROGRAM READER

They called her the Jinx, and no wonder Everywhere she went. Old Hard Luck was sure to go. She was an unlucky charm Then she followed the circus and it went to smash. Oh, she was a Jinx for sure. Then when she went to an orphans' home and the orphanage caught on fire—well you see the Jinx still pursued her. No matter where she turned, she brought bad luck. But she found happiness at last. And the Jinx was over.

It's a circus, this picture, "Jinx,"w hich comes to this theatre next——— with that rollicking comedienne, Mabel Normand in the title role. We guarantee you'll laugh louder and harder than you ever laughed before when you see this Goldwyn funmaker in her greatest comedy. It's a circus picture. And you know what that means That you'll have the time of your life. You'll see a genuine circus and a genuine comedy. And Mabel Normand. It's a rare treat, for you get all the thrills of the circus with the added enjoyment of Miss Normand in a hilariously funny picture.

SUGGESTIONS

Your exploitation campaign for "Jinx" should be centered around the circus theme. So "circus" the picture to the limit. Arrange a ballyhoo, have banners and streamers spread about conspicuously. You can work up a lot of clever stunts which smack of a circus in driving home the value of this picture. Publicize the picture far in advance. That is a good way to plant it in the spectator's mind. Feature the title. It lends itself well to exploitation of a humorous character. We have written some that could be used as samples.

CATCH LINES

"Look out for her! She's a Jinx." "How's your luck, has it left you?" "Jinx" is in town. "Be careful!" See Mabel Normand, the funmaker, in her greatest comedy, "Jinx."

Come and see "Jinx," with Mabel Normand. It is a story of circus life—a story full of clever comedy and circus atmosphere. You will see the tumbling clowns, the snake dancer and Mabel Normand. What does she do? Come and find out. She is a complete circus in herself.

Ladies and Gentlemen—There will be a circus in this theatre next- - —. The biggest aggregation of entertainers ever assembled under one tent. Don't miss it. The circus is "Jinx" and it presents Mabel Normand as the star entertainer. See it.

You simply must see "Jinx." It will put the Jinx on your grouch, your blues. For one full hour you'll be as happy as a circus.

"THE WEB OF CHANCE"

Nothing Here to Cause You Worry

ALTHOUGH this is heralded as a "whimsical comedy drama starring Peggy Hyland," the instigator of the voluminous sub-titles tries to walk away with the show. There are only about five sets used in the picture and the balance is taken up with sub-titles or exteriors. Miss Hyland wears the one dress through the picture excepting for the few minutes spent in a riding habit.

But this picture does not pretend to be anything but light and frivolous, and it is both. Even the members of the cast do not appear to take it too seriously. If everything is all right at your home, and things are running smoothly at the office, you can witness this picture and remain serene and contented to the end, as it does not present any weighty problems for you to solve. There is nothing in it to cause you worry. It was built for entertainment purposes only and may generally fulfill its mission.

The uncle is a private detective and when he leaves town temporarily the girl and her cousin become amateur detectives. She arrests a man, thinking he is a thief, and after she finds he isn't she marries him, while her cousin is arrested by the village constable.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Fox presents Peggy Hyland in "The Web of Chance" for a ——— days run at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

This is described as a comedy drama with a pretty romantic interest and plenty of adventure. Henry Hamm is Peggy Hyland's leading man and the offering is from the story by Edgar Franklin.

John Harrison is head of the Harrison Agency and his niece and nephew assist him in the office. The young ones are especially anxious to assist him actively in detective work and the youthful nephew is constantly reading Old Sleuth stories and experimenting with disguises to the amusement of the niece.

During a short vacation in the mountains the niece is courted very briskly by a young city fellow who gives the name of Arthur Brown. When the plans and specifications of the great Sarsfield Machine Works has been stolen this man Brown is suspicioned as he is an employe, but he disappears.

In the absence of her detective uncle the niece takes up his trail and this brings her through several escapades and many amusing situations. When she finally corners him in a country house she counts upon the assistance of the village constable but that worthy has fallen asleep on the job.

The constable wakes up in time to arrest the wrong man and takes the nephew, an amateur sleuth, to the town lock-up. And then the pretty niece finds that she loves the man she has arrested but determines to put duty before love.

Then the man confesses, not that he is the thief but that he loves her and is glad she has arrested him. Then comes the climax, and it is a welcome denouement for the young couple.

PROGRAM READER

Here is an alert, ambitious and pretty young woman who starts tracking a man until she finds him.

The girl is an amateur detective and believes that the young fellow is guilty of the theft of some very valuable papers.

When she finds him she is amazed to recognize a former very ardent suitor whom she had met some time before at a summer resort.

This is comedy drama. And the comedy is derived from the fact that this girl was mistaken in her man. She resolved to put duty before love and arrested him. And he was glad to be arrested by such a charming little girl. Because he knew that the only crime he could possibly be accused of was the possible stealing of her heart. And she was just as guilty because she had already stolen his heart.

to all of you and
A Happy New Year!

So there you are and the many comedy situations and romance is pictured in "The Web of Chance," a Wiliam Fox production coming to this theatre next week. And Peggy Hyland is the star.

SUGGESTIONS

After booking this picture you will, of course, adopt the regular exploitation methods of announcing it. It will not stand for any big special angles of exploitation, consequently it is up to you to get as much as possible out of the title, "The Web of Chance;" the author, Edgar Franklin; the star, Peggy Hyland, and the producer, William Fox. Of course the title may be deceiving to many as to the theme of the story. Therefore you should announce it as a modern romantic comedy. Your best bet outside of these regular channels is to use the catch lines in as many spots as possible.

CATCH LINES

She chased a man almost ragged, thinking he was a thief, and then arrested her future husband.

This girl was not a regular detective. She was only a volunteer. It's a pleasure to be arrested by a pretty amateur sleuth.

When her gasoline gave out after a wild pursuit of the thief she was forced to accept gasoline from him.

She was very clumsy while going hurriedly through his clothes which hung in a closet. So she married him, and no doubt became very adept.

It's a good thing that the constable who assisted her in arresting the man, was also a Justice of the Peace. He performed his duty. He married the couple.

"WANTED, A HUSBAND"
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Registers as Highly Amusing Comedy

BILLIE BURKE has a role here that affords her an opportunity of displaying some real activity instead of simply posing, and she suitably enacts the part in a charming manner. While the picture may be considered a trifle slow at the start it soon picks up a faster tempo and as it increases its stride it noticeably takes a stronger hold on the spectators.

Your women patrons will like the gowns, and the cast is well balanced with capable artists of the correct type. The story is one of those light comedy romances which requires no elaborate settings or spectacular effects and it registers as highly amusing, being also favored with a very clear continuity.

The girl is unkempt through carelessness and is aroused from her apparent stupor when her two room mates announce their forthcoming weddings. She realizes that she must ginger up a bit and a course of gymnastics augmented by dressmakers and hairdressers accomplishes wonders. After some laughable escapades she wins for herself a husband in the lottery of love.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Billie Burke in her latest Paramount-Artcraft picture is scheduled for a ——— days' run at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

Samuel Hopkins Adams wrote the story, and James L. Crane is the star's leading man. A group of pretty women with striking gowns is declared to be one of the many attractive features in this production.

Amanda Darcy Cole is very careless of her personal appearance and allows herself to become actually unkempt. Her two young lady room-mates come in very enthusiastically one day and she learns that the young men who have been sending them flowers and candies have proposed and a double wedding is soon to be held.

The Cole girl tells her girl friend across the hall that she has never had a fellow and the girl urges her to perk up and spend some of her bank account on clothes and with the hairdressers. And also to take a course of gymnastic exercises and adopt a little style.

When she finally does this the change is marvelous and the young fellows flock around her in droves. She conjures in her mind an English lord, whom she says she is engaged to and even goes so far as to show her friends a picture of him that she has found. This picture happened to be the lost photograph of a nice young fellow who had put on the disguise during some amateur theatricals.

A practical joker coaxes the two newly married couples to occupy his bungalow and also invites the Cole girl. She sees the others on the train and in desperation realizes that she must have an English husband to show them, as she was now supposed to be married. And in the same car was the exact man of her photograph, having put on the disguise again to escape a process server.

Some very amusing situations arise from these complications and "Wanted, a Husband" is heralded as one of the best light comedy romances that Billie Burke has ever presented.

PROGRAM READER

All her girl friends were getting married. And for many months they were daily receiving candies and flowers while their nice young men were calling upon them.

It was glorious—for them.

But no young man ever paid any attention to her. So she decided to turn over a new leaf. She started by giving her face a good washing. Then she went to a hair dresser.

There was money enough left in her purse to purchase some attractive gowns. But this was not all she did.

The girl found out that she was not only unkempt, but had also allowed herself to lope along instead of briskly walking. And was getting just a little bit too fat.

A gymnasium managed by an ex-pugilist did wonders for her.

Here is the outcome—keep it secret: The fellows fairly flocked to her. Simple, wasn't it?

Billie Burke appears as the girl in the case and the Paramount-Artcraft picture portraying this series of events is coming to this theatre next week.

It is entitled, "Wanted, a Husband."

SUGGESTIONS

When this picture is booked for your theatre you should display as many pictures of the star around in as many places as you can find spots for. And Billie Burke undoubtedly has considerable drawing power in many localities. Your next best bet is the title, used in connection with catch lines mostly. And as the Paramount-Artcraft brand name is well advertised, do not fail to mention the brand at every opportunity. An inexpensive exploitation stunt is the insertion of a classified ad in your daily newspapers under the classification of "Male Help Wanted." As follows: "Wanted, A Husband," apply to Miss Darcy Cole, in care of Billie Burke at the ——— theatre. No flowers or rice.

CATCH LINES

When she decided that she was losing out in the lottery of love she washed her face and won a husband.

The girl knew she was adding weight and allowing herself to become actually unkempt. So she took up gymnastic training and became the perfect ingenue.

One girl decides that she should commit matrimony. So she took a course of boxing lessons.

She decided that competition was fierce and that if she wanted a husband she would have to comb her hair and cut out the slouchy walk.

"A JOYOUS LIAR"
(BRUNTON-HODKINSON)

Kerrigan Picture Has Interesting Moments

J. WARREN KERRIGAN has one of those mock-heroic roles in "The Joyous Liar," a story that is as light and fluffy as snowflakes. One must simply accept it as a breeze for the star—a made-to-order subject for his romantic expression. You cannot accept it as plausible—in fact you don't want to accept it in that light at all. If you do you won't be entertained. But if you accept it in the spirit in which it is written and played then you are in for an hour of passable entertainment. You will look upon the star ensnaring a girl by his ability to tell whopping big lies. It is a fantastic creation and it unfolds a fair quota of action for so mild a theme.

Kerrigan is mistaken for a criminal and lugged off to the home of a criminologist, where the latter uses him as "copy." The hero doesn't mind it in the least, since it not only takes him out of jail, but places him near the girl for whose rescue he is arrested. After a series of mild adventures on his part, and the counterplay of the old man, we find him the center of a lively situation which has to do with an elopement. The story here defies conventions and truth if you're looking at it seriously, for it presents the "criminal" assaulting the police and resisting arrest. But the story must have a breezy finish, and there you are.

Somehow the story does not sag in the middle as a majority of such things do. Which speaks well for the director, Ernest C. Warde. He has kept it moving faster than the facts in the case warranted. And it holds together well. It couldn't do anything else with such a frail idea. Mr. Kerrigan gets a lot of fun out of the role and he is assisted by Lillian Walker, Joseph J. Dowling and others. Mr. Dowling has a weak role, but he makes the most of it.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

J. Warren Kerrigan, the popular romantic actor, will be seen at the ——— theatre again on ——— of ——— week. His latest picture is "The Joyous Liar," and judging from the praise it has merited from reliable critics it is one of the best in his highly pleasng series of picture productions. From the opening scene to the final fade-out the action mingles thrills and laughs in such alluring proportions that the interest is never once allowed to drop. The story for "The Joyous Liar" is written by Jack Cunningham and produced under the direction of Ernest C. Warde. He has kept the action moving spontaneously throughout and the original way he has of creating his effect makes the story appear in a refreshing light.

Mr. Kerrigan assumes the role of Burke Harlan, a wealthy artist who is arrested for an alleged attempt to steal Anne Warren's car, resulting from his having in reality saved it from the thieves. The girl's father, Wilbur Warren, is a scientific criminologist who has a theory he can cure criminals by studying and reforming them. Burke is released from jail and taken into custody by Warren. Of course he could easily prove his identity, but when he is offered a chance to reform he accepts it in a spirit of fun. Besides it gives him an opportunity to be near the girl with whom he is infatuated. She does not know that he is a "criminal" and he tells her blood-curdling tales of his exploits not only to arouse her curiosity but to excite the wonder of her father, who declares that Burke is the worst criminal he has ever attempted to reform.

A rival lover, the police commissioner, is desirous of taking Harlan back into the custody of the law. So he awaits an opportunity to frame him. But Harlan proves his resourcefulness by outwitting them all and elopes with the girl and marries her. With the complications swept aside he reveals his identity. The star does fine work in his study of the pseudo-crook and he is ably supported by Lillian Walker and Joseph J. Dowling.

PROGRAM READER

Why did the authorities arrest him as a desperate criminal just because he was trying to rescue a captivating girl from a group of auto thieves? He had commandeered her car when they caught him and lugged him off to jail. Why was he placed in the custody of the girl's father, a criminologist, and compelled to have the latter study him at close range? He didn't know, but he accepted it all in a spirit of mischief. He would become a joyous liar and make himself out a desperate criminal and prove to the old man that he was wrong. Anyway he was in love with the girl and she with him. And he was glad to suffer any experimenting on the part of her father to be near her.

This is the brief outline of "The Joyous Liar," J. Warren Kerrigan's new picture which comes to this theatre next ———. The climax brings a scene full of humor and excitement and the entire story is chock full of comedy high lights which are brought forward with effective expression. Sounds pretty interesting, doesn't it? Be sure and see it.

SUGGESTIONS

If you've played the other Kerrigan pictures recently you should have no trouble in bringing the crowds in for this one. Reports indicate that this star's offerings are going over big no matter what locality they are shown in. He is one of the oldest actors in point of service on the screen and he has a well established following. So you don't have to go to any length in emphasizing his personality. Merely mention that J. Warren Kerrigan will appear in his newest picture. But use stills of him and also a teaser campaign.

Tell that he is seen in a new sort of role here. Tell that the picture is a joyful comedy—a comedy rich in romance and adventure. All that is necessary in announcing "The Joyous Liar" is to lay stress on the action and the comedy and the troubles which come to the star. You can't go wrong if you follow this course. For the rest of the picture will advertise itself if you give it a chance by playing it successive days.

CATCH LINES

They thought him a criminal, and he led them to believe that he was beyond redemption. Why? Because he was in love with a beautiful girl. See Warren Kerrigan in "The Joyous Liar."

He told some big whoppers and she believed him. And no matter how black he painted himself it only made the girl love him more. See "The Joyous Liar," a comedy with thrills and adventure and romance.

He was arrested as a criminal and placed in the custody of a criminologist. The latter would reform him but gave it up as a bad job when he found that his daughter loved the young man. What happened? See "The Joyous Liar."

See "The Joyous Liar," J. Warren Kerrigan's new picture. The breeziest role he has ever played.

"THE LAST OF HIS PEOPLE"
(SELECT)

Lewis Has Characteristic Role Here

IN "The Last of His People" Mitchell Lewis has a story which is a reminder of the nickelodeon days as far as the characterization is concerned. He plays the part of an Indian and the long recognized barrier between the red race and the white composes the central idea. For it is a romance between the red man and a white girl that gives the story its sustaining point, although a wealth of counterplotting is offered to carry out the adventurous line of action. Make up your mind that it unfolds as rich an assortment of picturesque scenes as were ever contained in a Western. These backgrounds are truly enchanting and give the offering an appeal quite aside from its sympathetic characterization.

Mr. Lewis is a sort of last Mohican, an adopted son of a white man. A chance comes for him to denounce the ways of the paleface when an irresponsible girl from the East makes a mockery of his love. And when an accepted suitor attempts to violate the honor of the Indian's sister, you are in for an old-fashioned Mitch Lewis fight—one of those fights staged upon a precipice, with man to man and knife against knife. A Lewis fight is as sure as his homespun shirt.

It is a story of the primitive elements of man, balanced with softened attitudes. You have your conflict and your contrast of characters. Some of these are rather inconsistent in their actions. And the plot does not always hold you in its grip. This is a minor flaw in a picture calculated to please for its vivid and vital qualities. Mr. Lewis has never given a more rugged portrayal and one more thoroughly in character. His study of the Indian can be put alongside of his Canuck and not suffer. Such is his ability to portray the son of the soil as it flourishes in the Northwest or God's vast cathedral as some will have it. Robert North Bradbury wrote and directed the picture and his work is meritorious.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mitchell Lewis, the virile star of Western pictures, will come to the ——— theatre on——— of ——— week in his latest offering entitled "The Last of His People." This is a vital drama of the Northwest and it affords the star a picturesque role—one in which he takes the fullest advantage. It is an Indian story with Mr. Lewis cast as Lone Wolf, the last of his tribe, who, with his sister, Na-ta-he, is adopted and reared by an embittered white man who had cast himself to a life of isolation in the forest of the Northwest. Anthony Briggs had taken up this life through disillusionment—brought of course by his wife who has eloped with the foreman of the lumber camp, Robert Lacey.

So Lone Wolf and his sister grow to maturity. He is educated in the ways of the whites, but never having seen a white woman, he is startled one day to see a pretty white girl, meet with an accident. Lone Wolf rescues her and is at once captivated by her charms. She returns to her hunting lodge where her frivolous companions from New York at once design the unsuspecting Indian as the victim of a practical joke in which the girl, Yvonne, is to encourage his attentions and win his love on a wager. This she accomplishes but in doing so she failed to reckon with her own heart and the deception she played upon the honest Indian. So he denounces her and puts aside the ways of the white race as too deceitful to countenance. His sister has been intrigued by Lacey's son, who is also a member of the New York party. And Lone Wolf pursues him to bring him back. When they meet Lacey puts up a fight—a fight which ends in his death.

The working out of this story requires all the skill of the author-director. It is a powerful drama which contains not only magnificent scenery but a plethora of dramatic situation. The star is well qualified to enact the leading character. A capable supporting cast is one of the features.

PROGRAM READER

Do you like to see a picture of the Great Outdoors where the vast silences take hold of man and make him a child of nature? Do you like to see a picture of the Great Northwest in which a vivid, vital drama of life is enacted?. Do you enjoy seeing a picture of the woods and snow capped hills with Mitchell Lewis enacting one of his colorful roles? If so then "The Last of His People" is the picture for you. Here you will see the rugged star portraying an Indian, who is the last of his race. You will see him take up the ways of the white man only to discard them in the end. You will see a picture which expresses rich dramatic action, sympathy, pathos, sentiment and romance. You will be thrilled with the hair-raising situations; you will respond to the marvelously beautiful scenery.

"The Last of His People" is one of Mr. Lewis' greatest pictures. No actor knows the woods and hills better than Mitchell Lewis, and no actor is better qualified to enact a powerful drama of love and adventure. "The Last of His People" will be at this theatre next ———.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a Mitchell Lewis picture and if you've played this virile star in the past you shoud have no trouble in filling your house. He is quite the best interpreter of Northwest pictures on the screen. So take advantage of his art and bill him as such. Play up the title. It is catchy. It suggests an Indian and so it is. If you go in for lobby display you can decorate your house in Indian trimmings and trappings. Tell that the picture is a story of love and adventure—action and thrills, sentiment and pathos enacted against a background of marvelously beautiful scenery. By all means play up its grandeur.

Feature the star and emphasize the work he has done on the screen. Distribute dodgers, circulars and throwaways of the picture. Lithographs for "The Last of His People" are attractive and should be used freely. Play up the punch points. Feature it as a vivid and vital story in which the virile Mitchell Lewis is the star. You can make a lot of atmosphere for the picture if you want to go in for a lobby display. If you employ an artist have him draw a colorful sketch for the exterior of the house.

CATCH LINES

He fell in love with a white girl and she toyed with his affections. Disillusioned, he resolved to cast aside the ways of the white race. What happened? See "The Last of His People."

He was the last of his race. See Mitchell Lewis in his powerful characterization of an Indian. See a vital, vivid drama of the Great Northwest. See "The Last of His People."

(VITAGRAPH)

Better Than Average Entertainment

THIS photoplay will be generally liked, although it may not cause any deluge at the box office nor excite sensational comment. But it very pleasantly unfolds a threadworn story in a most acceptable manner and the star is very charming in her role. Gladys Leslie is supported by a very good cast of capable screen performers.

A very creditable attempt was made to provide appropriate sets, and the cabaret scenes, as well as the midnight house-party, were particularly effective. A wealthy widower is a Broadway libertine and after witnessing a classical dance performed by a sweet girl at her college exercises, he determines to secure her for himself.

She is tricked into dancing one night at a notorious cabaret and at another time she dances at a midnight house-party, not knowing that the host is the libertine whom she had repulsed. The host pursues her to her dressing room, but this excitement causes him heart failure. He is so angry at the girl that he schemes to forever disgrace her and before he passes away that night he makes a will leaving his millions to her and cuts his son off with a single dollar.

The romance is injected when the son meets the girl in a distant town whence she had fled to escape humiliation. Not knowing each other, they fall in love. This picture is better than average entertainment.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and very pleasing; Elite, average puller and fairly pleasing; Family, good puller and fairly pleasing; Workers, good puller and very pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released November 30.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Gladys Leslie in "The Golden Shower" is the Vitagraph attraction coming to the ——— theatre for a ——— days' run beginning ———.

The star appears in the role of a sweet young college girl who leads the class in its classic dancing exercises. A wealthy man known as "Broadway Al," is a typical libertine and catches sight of the graceful young girl in one of her dances.

By conspiring with a well known cabaret dancer he induces the young girl to dance one night at a notorious cabaret but she repulses him and flees away. To enable the old fellow to meet the girl under more favorable circumstances a dancing party is arranged at his palatial home with the festivities commencing at midnight.

The girl is engaged to do her classic dance here little realizing that her persecutor is the host. When she takes refuge in her dressing room he is seized with heart failure but before he passes away that night he wills her his entire fortune cutting his only son off with a single dollar.

This old libertine's idea in doing this was to disgrace the girl and brand her as his own in order to be revenged for her spurning of his suit. The stage where she danced had been backed by a strong X-Ray light arranged to shine through her costume and thus blast her reputation.

When the young girl is put out of college and shunned by all her old friends she finally goes home to her father and he also bids her to go away. She does not claim a cent of the old millionaire's money and finally seeks a new life in a far distant town.

It is here that she meets the son of the millionaire who was so cruel to her. Neither knows who the other is but they both fall in love at first sight. And then comes the denouement.

This picture is described as one of the best productions Gladys Leslie has starred in for pretty sentiment and great heart interest.

PROGRAM READER

Broadway Al has become infatuated with a sweet college girl and induces her to give one of her classic dances at his home.

To blast her reputation so that she will not longer repulse his advances he causes a strong X-Ray light to be so arranged behind the stage that it shines through her light costume.

Her college refuses to take her back again and all her former friends forsake her. When Broadway Al dies he leaves her his fortune with the exception of a single dollar which goes to his son in the west.

Gladys Leslie in a strong moment from her latest Vitagraph feature, "The Golden Shower"

This poor persecuted girl is finally forced to leave the town to save herself continued humiliation but refuses to accept a cent of her inheritance.

It is in the west that she later meets the son of the libertine and they both fall in love at first sight without knowing who the other really is.

This is the romantic situation unfolded in Gladys Leslie's latest Vitagraph picture scheduled to be shown at this theatre all next week.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you will make the star's name prominent in all your exploitation especially if she happens to be a particularly good drawing card in your town. Display her pictures and cuts in as many places as possible. The attractive layouts are also good to use and some of the scenes portray lively cabaret groups. The catch lines should also be utilized. Set the program reader on a card and use these as "throw-aways" and they may produce some good results.

She was a sweet college girl gracefully performing a classic dance at the school exercises, and the very next day everybody shunned her.

CATCH LINES

A veritable shower of gold greeted one girl but wealth without honor and respect did not appeal to her, so she ran away.

One Broadway libertine plans a terrible revenge for one girl that repulsed his advances.

"TOBY'S BOW"

(GOLDWYN)

A Very Entertaining Photoplay

THIS picture will no doubt be better received by Tom Moore's old admirers than the English themes he has been seen in so much of late. He is perfectly adapted to the role and is surrounded by some pretty women in a photoplay set in Greenwich Village, New York City, and in Virginia.

The direction, mountings, continuity and photography are all up to present-day standards and the story contains a very pretty romantic flavor. Whenever he approaches the dramatic it is cleverly breezed along in light comedy channels. A very entertaining photo play that should give pleasure to all classes of patrons.

The young author has spent all the royalties, received from his successful novel, in a riot of fast living, and finally visits a quiet place in Virginia far away from the Bohemian set. Under an assumed name he meets the daughter of a proud old Southern family and collaborates with her on a novel which is finally sold and thus enables her to pay off the mortgage on the old homestead. She is furious when she discovers that he is already a successful author and declares she will accept no charity. But everything is adjusted in Cupid's hand-book and he is favored with the very deferential bow that Toby, the old colored servant, saves for members of this naughty family.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and very pleasing; Elite, big puller and very pleasing; Family, good puller and very pleasing; Workers, good puller and generally pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Tom Moore in his latest Goldwyn picture, "Toby's Bow," will have a ——— day's showing at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

This is taken from the Broadway stage success by John Tainter Foote, and the scenes are laid in Greenwich Village, New York City, and in Virginia.

The star appears as Tom Blake, the author of a very successful novel, who has squandered all his royalties in wild living among the Bohemian set. His publisher finally advises him to seek a quiet place where he can rest and then start on another novel.

He learns that a proud old Southern family in a small Virginia town is forced by financial difficulties to take in a boarder or two and goes there under an assumed name. The pretty daughter does not let the old mother know that Tom Blake is a paying boarder and he is received as a guest.

The old black servant defers to the guest but does not favor him with the elaborate bow retained for members of the aristocratic family. The young man collaborates with the girl in writing a novel which is accepted and the money received enables her to pay off the pressing debts.

It is then she learns that her guest is using an assumed name and that he is her favorite author. She is furious as she believes he has been fooling her and declares she will have none of his charity.

A trip to New York through a Greenwich Village entertainment is enough for the girl and she returns to the Virginia home that the author had never left. And as the couple reach a clear understanding the author is at last favored by the old black servant's bow. "Toby's Bow."

PROGRAM READER

There was only one way for him to receive the elaborate deferential bow of old Toby, the black servant.

And that was to become a member of this proud old Virginia family.

Toby did not hand these bows around promiscuously. You just HAD to be a member of the family.

And with a pretty but very haughty daughter to win in order to become a member of this family, was no easy job.

Besides all this he felt that he was unworthy of the girl. He had thrown his small fortune away in fast living among the Bohemian set in Greenwich Village.

Tom Moore has the star role in "Toby's Bow" which will be shown at this theatre next week. It is a Goldwyn picture and the scenes are all laid in America.

A group of very pretty girls enliven the cast and a very neat little romance embellishes this comedy drama.

Don't miss "Toby's Bow."

SUGGESTIONS

After booking this picture you should emphasize the fact that it is laid in America as the recent features starring Tom Moore have been set in England. And mention that it is from the Broadway stage success by John Tainter Foote. As Goldwyn has a national advertising campaign under way you should not fail to publicize the brand name as all these things help considerably at the box office. For your lobby or a special street stunt you could have a man make-up as a colored elderly servant with the gray hair and dressed in a sort of thread-bare dress suit. An old silk hat would also be appropriate. Let him simply walk the streets or walk in the lobby. Have the name "Toby" on a ribbon crossing his expansive shirt front. And have no other advertising appear. He will form the tie-in and attract great attention by simply making a very elaborate and deferential bow in an expansive manner to about every sixth person he meets.

CATCH LINES

He spent his money in wild living and then hied himself away to the quiet Virgnia countryside. And then it happened.

Oh if he could only earn the privilege of receiving one of those elaborate bows that Old Black Toby reserved for immediate members of the aristocratic family.

His body was run down from city excesses and while the country life quieted his body it almost immediately lost him his heart.

"MY HUSBAND'S OTHER WIFE"

(BLACKTON-PATHE)

Satisfying Offering on a Marital Theme

J. STUART BLACKTON'S picture, "My Husband's Other Wife," makes a satisfying offering, all things considered. While it brings out nothing new in plot and characterization, yet its assortment of dramatic ingredients are so well emphasized that the spectator is kept constantly interested. The theme is based upon the marriage and divorce question and presents it on that biblical phrase—"whom God has joined together, let no man put asunder."

Therefore when the actress divorces her husband, a physician, the latter marries an unsophisticated country girl. His rival, a playwright, is desirous of marrying the divorcee. But she discourages him because she is still in love with her ex-husband. When the playwright discovers him renewing his affection for her he denounces him. Whereupon the doctor takes refuge in the Bible. The author gets out of his dilemma by having the actress show a magnanimous spirit and departs, leaving the husband with his second wife. The latter has received her husband's confession of an earlier marriage and her belief in the biblical phrase is sincere. She leavs him only to be reconciled through the efforts of the actress.

The picture attempts to show that a leading lady can love her husband and her art at the same time. It does not strike any heights of inspiration, but it does offer a little drama of family life that contains a note of heart interest, a vein of pathos and a deal of simplicity. The action is fairly well sustained for one is not always sure what the conclusion will bring. The interpretation of the story has been intrusted to Sylvia Breamer, Robert Gordon, Warren Chandler and others. The latter contributes the outstanding performance. "My Husband's Other Wife" may be summed up as a study in contrasts—with the virtues of country life predominating naturally.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Adelaide Hedlar.....Sylvia Breamer
Wilfred Dean.....Robert Gordon
Dr. Mark Ridgewell.....Warren Chandler
Nettie Bryson.....May McAvoy
Rita Rivulet.....Fanny Rice
By Stanley Olmsted.
Directed by J. Stuart Blackton.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"My Husband's Other Wife," a Blackton picture, will be presented at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week with Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon as the featured players. The story, by Stanley Olmsted, presents a famous actress who loves the glamor of the footlights and will not give them up for the husband who has given up his ambitions to be just "Adelaide Hedlar's husband." When a divorce has finally been obtained she hesitates about marrying Wilfred Dean, a playwright, the man who has written her most successful plays, until she knows that her first husband, Dr. Ridgewell, has married again. Even then she hesitates though Dean is a persistent suitor.

The first husband, a physician, takes another name and goes to a small town, where he builds a hospital, a school and a church and becomes the guardian of the community. One day Adelaide learns that he has married again, and she, realizing, too late, that her husband was a man whose love was worth having, decides to win him back. She goes to the little town and develops a friendship for the doctor's wife—a friendship which makes her charitable in the end. Sooner than disillusion the innocent girl who has a theory that the sanctity of the marriage vows cannot be violated, she departs, leaving the couple to continue their happiness.

The story moves steadily and surely and it has a tensity that is grippingly absorbing. It is rich in sentiment and heart interest. The characterization is well drawn and the plot unfolds a deal of dramatic action. Miss Breamer and Mr. Gordon give satisfactory performances of the actress and playwright respectively, while Warren Chandler portrays the husband with considerable feeling. May McAvoy is charming as his second wife. Mr. Blackton's direction is capable.

CATCH LINES

Can an actress love her husband and her art at the same time and do justice to both? This question is answered dramatically in "My Husband's Other Wife," a Blackton picture.

Adelaide Hedlar was a stage favorite. But her home life could not be called happy. Before she realized what her husband meant to her, she had become her husband's "other wife."

A drama of the footlights—a drama of the country—a drama of marriage and divorce—a drama of sentiment and heart appeal and one that carries a powerful message. See "My Husband's Other Wife."

A picture of home and family—that is "My Husband's Other Wife," which comes here next ———. First it's Love—then it's Marriage—and then—? A drama of woman's desire for Display, and a man's cry for Love and Home.

PROGRAM READER

When Nettie Bryson married Dr. Mark Loring, her father, a minister said to her: "Do not forget that what God hath joined together let no man put asunder!" Neither of them knew that Dr. Loring was the divorced husband of a famous actress. And when, after months of happy life, the second wife, learned of the first wife, her narrow training convinced her that she was not his wife.

How she abides by her father's advice, how the first wife saved the woman who had come into the doctor's life—saved her from disillusionment, how the actress realized that she loved the man who had once belonged to her, and appreciated the fact that he had gone out of her life for good and all, are events that compose a drama filled with dramatic situations—situations of compelling interest. The picture is by Stanley Olmsted and is a Blackton production. In the featured roles are Sylvia Breamer, the Australian actress, and Robert Gordon. A picture of heart interest, home and family. See it.

SUGGESTIONS

In the first place you have an attractive title which can be exploited to its full possibilities. So use it in catch lines and appropriate teasers—so framed as to arouse curiosity. We have written some catch lines that would fit well in your copy. Make mention that it is a drama of the contrast between the life behind the footlights and the life of a country village. Use questions in your copy. Ask if it is possible for an actress to remain faithful to her husband and her art at the same time. Tell that it is a play of marriage and divorce.

Use the theme and outline it in a way to attract attention. The actress was known as her husband's other wife, when he married again after a divorce. Tell that it is a story that shows the desire of a woman for finery and show, and the desire of a man for love and home. Tell of its dramatic highlights. Feature the author and director. Feature the principal players and state that each has been seen in some big production. If you use questions for your newspaper copy you will certainly arouse interest. Bring out its pathos and heart appeal.

"THE LORD LOVES THE IRISH"

(BRUNTON-HODKINSON)

Melodrama and Humor in This Kerrigan Film

MONTE M. KATTERJOHN has concocted a fairly clever comedy-drama in "The Lord Loves the Irish," J. Warren Kerrigan's newest release. It seemingly touches all the elements of dramatic fare, for there are moments of comedy, flashes of melodrama and notes of pathos and sentiment. It is an interesting characterization he has drawn even though his plot is somewhat hackneyed. And the title is going to make a lot of friends for the picture. It sure is a winner. The star appears as a product of the New York police force—direct from the "auld sod." Typically Irish, he rises to the top in typically Irish fashion. Oh, yes, he has influence. His uncle is an alderman, but then you must reckon on his own native wit and shrewdness and good-natured personality.

The sentimental touch is revealed in the opening reel before the hero's emigration and the action is naturally of a quiet character here. But it picks up its melodramatic threads once he arrives in America and finishes with plenty of strength. The meat of the subject is found in an attempt to replace the currency of a bank by a master counterfeiter with the Irish policeman catching the crook eventually. The romantic interest, without which no Kerrigan picture could be called complete, keeps pace with its moving moments. The banker's daughter is not sure of her heart and does not encourage the policeman, even though she is of Irish descent. So you have your conflict to keep the spectator interested.

The continuity of this subject is clearly defined and progressive. The only criticism of the picture may be found in the action which carries a theatrical flourish at times. Mr. Kerrigan looks better in this picture than he has in a long time. In the first place he has a good characterization to work with and he has surely taken advantage of it. Fritzi Brunette is the girl in the case and Joseph Dowling is the counterfeiter.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Lord Loves the Irish" is the name of the photoplay which will come to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week with J. Warren Kerrigan as the star. This story is from the pen of Monte M. Katterjohn, one of the best known scenario writers, and it offers Mr. Kerrigan a charming Irish role. He is introduced as Miles Machree, who meets and falls in love with an Irish-American girl, Sheila Lynch, when she is touring Ireland with her father. Shortly after her departure back to America Miles follows her, and gets a position on the New York police force through the influence of his uncle, an alderman. His "beat" is the picturesque East Side and he chances upon clues of a counterfeiting scheme and follows them.

Sheila's father is president of a bank and the girl is engaged to her father's secretary, Allyn Dexter, who is the tool of the master counterfeiter. Miles learns that the girl he loves is engaged to Dexter, and shortly after that the latter and the counterfeiter plan to replace the currency of the bank with bad money and escape. At this time the Secret Service takes a hand. Miles arranges a raid on the counterfeiter's den, and rescues Sheila, who had been lured there. In the ensuing scuffle Dexter is killed and Hugo Strauss, the counterfeiter is captured. In gratitude for his pluck and courage, Miles is given a responsible position in the bank and his determination to win the girl is rewarded at last.

The picture abounds in atmosphere and offers a novel plot filled with action and suspense. The romantic element is sustained throughout the picture. Mr. Kerrigan gives a fine performance of the hero and he is assisted by Fritzi Brunette, Joseph J. Dowling and others. Ernest C. Warde directed.

PROGRAM READER

The romantic actor, J. Warren Kerrigan, will be at the ——— theatre soon in his newest photoplay, "The Lord Loves the Irish," a comedy drama by Monte M. Katterjohn, the well known scenario writer. This star has assumed many roles in his career on the screen but it is safe to say that never has he appeared to better advantage than as the son of Erin in "The Lord Loves the Irish." He comes straight from the "auld sod" to New York. And where do you guess he landed? Why on the police force.

An Irishman loves excitement and a fight. And the force is the place to find it. Well he finds both all right, but he also finds love. It comes to him because he is the "divil" with the women. It's a romantic picture—a sentimental picture—an exciting picture and it is charged with atmosphere, action and suspense. M. Kerrigan has selected an aggregation of popular players who accord him unusually brilliant support. Among them is the vivacious Fritzi Brunette.

SUGGESTIONS

Take advantage of this title in the exploitation of the picture. Treat it humorously. It lends itself well to a catch line and teaser campaign, so be sure to emphasize it along these angles. Make mention that it presents the star in a new role. He has played many parts during his career on the screen but he has never played an Irishman before. Feature this actor with the Irish name in a rattling good Irish comedy-drama. Emphasize that he becomes a New York policeman, a job he took because it promised adventure and excitement.

Play up the theme. The Lord loves the Irish, because they look on life good naturedly and take advantage of their opportunities. Mention the other players, particularly Fritzi Brunette who appears opposite the star. Make the front of your house as Irish in atmosphere as possible. Pasteboard shamrocks could be used and also the Irish flag. Have your orchestra play strictly Irish tunes. Use stills of the star and the picture. These are colorful enough to attract attention.

CATCH LINES

No matter how much trouble an Irishman gets into you can depend on it that the Lord loves him enough to help him out of it. See how J. Warren Kerrigan is helped in "The Lord Loves the Irish."

A romance direct from the "auld sod" is "The Lord Loves the Irish," J. Warren Kerrigan's picture. See it.

He came from Ireland and found a job on the New York police force. See how he found romance, adventure and excitement. See "The Lord Loves the Irish," J. Warren Kerrigan's best picture.

He had the luck of the Irish and the pluck of the Irish too. And between the two he won the finest girl in the land. See "The Lord Loves the Irish."

Directory of New Theatres

ARKANSAS

Little Rock—The S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Incorporated, is to erect a new theatre on the corner of Sixth and Main streets, it is announced.

CALIFORNIA

Ontario—A new picture theatre is in course of construction at the corner of North Euclid and East B streets. It will be operated by J. V. Spaugh who owns the Euclid photoplay house in that town and will cost between $25,000 and $40,000.

Van Nuys—E. B. Ottestad and Lloyd Cornwell, are to erect a new theatre at a cost of $20,000.

Downey—Hogan Willeford is to erect a new theatre on the Daniel Lane lot on Crawford street.

Calipatria—H. M. Beale is constructing a new theatre. It has been leased by C. Cunningham, proprietor of the airdome and will be operated as a moving picture house.

Los Angeles—A new theatre to cost $2,000,000 and to seat 4.200, it is said, will be constructed by D. J. Grauman at the corner of Hill and Sixth streets.

Anaheim—Hugo Strodholl is to construct a new theatre on West Center street.

CONNECTICUT

Waterbury—A new theatre is to be erected on upper Main street on the site formerly occupied by A. Y. Beach.

Waterbury—If present plans materialize, a new theatre will be constructed on the site of the Art theatre which was destroyed by fire.

FLORIDA

Miami—A new theatre and office building is to be constructed at the corner of Twelfth street and Avenue B on the site of the Airdome building.

INDIANA

Corydon—It is rumored that a new picture house may be erected here within the immediate future.

South Bend—The new Blackstone theatre is in course of construction.

Ft. Wayne—A new picture house is to be constructed on the site of the Kiser Block. Joseph Bogenschuetz has leased the house and will operate it as a moving picture theatre.

Otwell—A new picture theatre is to be erected here. It will be operated by Verne McGowen.

ILLINOIS

Chicago—Ascher Brothers are to construct another new picture house on the site of the Marshall Field buildings at 110-112 N. State street.

Ottawa—Walter Bosselman is to erect a new picture theatre on the building site formerly occupied by Thomas Glancy.

Pesotum—A number of local residents have formed an organization to construct a new picture house just south of the Hoffman drug store.

Niantic—Edward Benedict is to build a new picture theatre.

IOWA

Caldwell—A new $60,000 picture house with a seating capacity of 800, may be erected on Arthur street.

KENTUCKY

Louisville—A new vaudeville and picture theatre may be erected on the Shirley site, Third and Chestnut streets.

MASSACHUSETTS

New Bedford—Theodore B. Baylies, manager of the Olympia theatre and local representative of the Gordon interests has announced that his company is to erect a new picture theatre and office building with a seating capacity of 2,000, in the center of the city.

Beverly—Bids are being received for the construction of the new Ware theatre at the corner of Cabot and Judson streets. Work on the structure will be started at an early date.

Adenville—Cote Brothers of Holyoke are to construct a new picture house on Grattan near Providence street. It will seat 600 and cost about $15,000.

MICHIGAN

Detroit—A company headed by J. A. Hagin is to build a new picture theatre in the Highland Park district, on Hamilton boulevard and Tuxedo avenue. It will seat about 1,500.

Flint—Plans are being prepared for the erection of a new picture theatre on North Saginaw street. It will seat 800.

Two Big Fox Plays in Production

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Fox Film Corporation that work has begun on the screening of the well known play "The Penalty" from the pen of Henry Clifford Colwell, with Madlaine Traverse as the star.

The story it is said abounds with dramatic action and contains many stirring scenes. During its run at the Manhattan Opera House in New York in 1912 "The Penalty" proved to be one of the most popular of the dramatic presentations of the year. Before its production in New York it played to capacity business in several of the largest cities of the country and reached the Metropolis with an established reputation as a big winner.

Miss Traverse is very enthusiastic over her new picture, as it affords her a role of dramatic strength.

Betty Hielburn who appears in the star's role in "The Girl of the Sea," a forthcoming Republic release

Madlaine Traverse and William Russell in Strong Vehicles

"The Penalty" is of a decidedly different type from any story in which she has appeared, and is of greater emotional power than "The Splendid Sin," "Snares of Paris" or "Lost Money," all recent Traverse pictures.

Denison Clift, of the Fox Western Scenario Department, adapted the stage play for the silver sheet.

Howard M. Mitchell who is directing Miss Traverse in "The Penalty," promises a very elaborate production. He has arranged for the construction of a number of large and costly sets.

Director Mitchell has provided Miss Traverse with a competent cast, including such talented artists as Howard Scott, Jack Rollens, Ben Deely, Edwin Booth Tilton, Genevieve Blinn, Eleanor Hancock and Correan Kirkham.

The William Russell-Emmett J. Flynn combination of star and director have started their third production for Fox. "Shod With Fire," from the pen of Harold Titus, has been adapted for the screen by Mr. Flynn. This same combination of star and director made "Eastward Ho!" and "The Lincoln Highwayman."

"Shod With Fire," is a fast moving story of the West. It has appeared in book form under the title of "Bruce of Circle A" and as a serial in a popular magazine as "A Stallion Shod With Fire."

Supporting the star in this production, which will be photographed in Arizona, are Helen Ferguson, Robert Cain, Betty Schade, George Stewart, Elson McDowell and Jack Connelly.

C. R. Wallace, the film editor and assistant to Director Flynn, has been in Arizona several days and has located spots near both Prescott and Phoenix where the exteriors of the picture will be made. As in the case of "The Lincoln Highwayman," the camera will be in the hands of Clyde De Vinna.

J. Anthony Roach adapted Harold Titus' story for the screen.

Serico Offers a Serial to State Righters

George Wiley of the Serico Producing Corporation, producers of "A Woman in Grey," has announced that this serial will be disposed of to state right buyers. Several territories have already been sold, and Mr. Wiley feels sure that the remainder of the country will be bought long before January 22nd, which has been set as the release date.

Plans are already under way for an advertising campaign to reach every exhibitor in the country.

Dwan Feature Well Received

"Soldiers of Fortune" Draws Big Crowds in East and West Despite the Storms

THE Realart officials report that the Allan Dwan production, "Soldiers of Fortune," is drawing overflow crowds wherever the picture is being shown, and this, in some instances, despite the disadvantage of inclement weather. Some of the telegrams recently received from exhibitors who have shown the picture are repeated below.

A. G. Talbot of Denver wires:

"'Soldiers of Fortune' opened today to tremendous crowds, and we were compelled to stop sale of tickets. Approximately three hundred standing waiting to get in all afternoon and night. Hundreds turned away notwithstanding the fact that all our streets are in darkness and a blizzard raging at night. We were not permitted to open until two thirty, account of fuel shortage. Congratulations."

Harry J. Wendland of Fresno, Cal., sends the following:

"'Soldiers of Fortune' broke all records here to-day. Opened to overflow crowds. Everyone agrees the production is wonderful. Thank you for splendid co-operation which sets a newer and better standard for service for distributor. Have the fullest confidence in coming Realart Pictures, and look forward to continuation of good work already begun."

From J. M. Schine of Gloversville, N. Y., comes the following telegram:

"In a terrific rain storm crowds mobbed the doors of my New Hippodrome theatre for admittance to see 'Soldiers of Fortune.' It has exceeded all my hopes. I consider it one of the greatest pictures ever shown to the public. Congratulations."

Recent visitors at Pathescope include F. G. Romell, Cincinnati, Manager of Redpath and Deer; Mr. Cornell of the Pathescope Co., of New England; Capt. Baird of the Philadelphia Exchange; and last, but by no means least in importance to the industry, Charles Pathe himself.

SOME of 'em come packed in small bundles. This man is one of them. But like little Dick Kerr of the White Sox, size only accentuates his ability. Rellihan dropped into the office a few weeks ago and forthwith proceeded to paralyze our right hand with a grip such as we imagine a boa constrictor advocates. And accompanying the shake was a smile a yard wide. All of which you may judge placards the man as having the makings of a crack-a-jack salesman.

Rellihan who is at present with the Franco-American Chemical Co., of CHICAGO—don't overlook that word CHICAGO—has had a wonderful schooling in the arts and wiles of merchandising and salesmanship. Some years ago he was a Buyer for the mammoth department store of Carson Pirie Scott and Co., of Chicago. While in this position he organized the photographic department on a progressive basis, and as a result the sales in this one department increased over fourfold.

After five years with Carson Pirie Scott and Co., he was made head of the high grade photographic equipment department of the great Marshall Field and Co. store in the same city.

Just before the war Mr. Rellihan looked ahead and saw the scarcity of chemicals which was sure to become a fact in this country. On his own "hook" he sent a force of men out into the country and purchased every available surplus stock of photographic chemicals. Even the small town drug store was visited. Soon the results began to be apparent.

Large users of chemicals began to notice their supplies dwindling with no prospect of replenishing them from European centres. Not having been confronted with such a situation before they were up against it. It would not have been profitable for them to have gone out into the market with the idea of purchasing a small amount here and another supply there. Reliance must be made on someone who knew where such chemicals could be obtained. Here is where Rellihan stepped into the breach.

Through his own experience in dealing in photographic chemicals aided by the information furnished by his corps of men in the field he knew exactly where the material could be obtained and could make promises for delivery and keep them. He was the "chemical man of the hour."

For some weeks now Mr. Rellihan has been in the New York district interesting motion picture laboratories in his new line of laboratory chemicals. At the present time he is on his way to the West Coast and the laboratories there. He will call on all of them who are interested in trying out his ARDEL line of supplies. We have no doubt but that he will be as well received there as he was in the Metropolitan district.

Most if not all of the space in the Cinemaquipment Center has been taken up. The exhibit seems to have become the Mecca of all equipment folk visiting the Big Town.

The Argus office in the Center has had a change of managers. W. E. Wing has been advanced to take charge of the Chicago office of the same firm and H. H. Cudmore has come on from Cleveland to fill Wing's place.

Messrs. Crabtree and Rupert of the Eastman Kodak Co., made a one day stop in New York a few weeks ago. The two-of-em made the rounds of the supply houses and machine manufacturer's but the reason for it all was not given. Possibly George Eastman is thinking of entering the projector field.

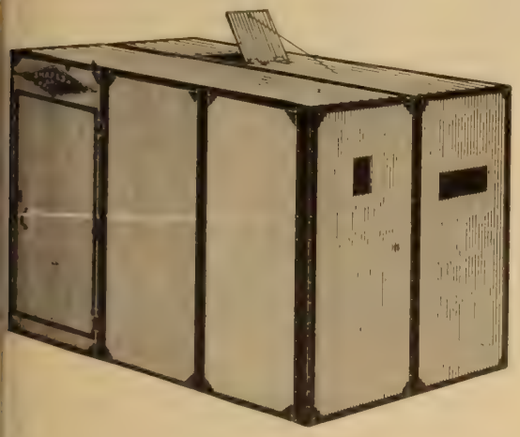
THE ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. COMPANY CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Portable and Stationary M. P. Booths

QUITE a complete study of booths for motion picture machines has been made by the Sharlow Bros. Company, with a view to having available some sort of enclosure for every need. In this they seem to have succeeded wonderfully well.

The sheet metal booth combines efficiency, safety and convenience. They are made of sheet metal securely riveted to an angle iron frame and can be furnished in different sizes to conform to space that may be conveniently utilized in theatres. Each booth may be taken down or put up in a few minutes' time, since the floor and roof are made in panel sections. These panels are bolted together with thumb screws and wing nuts and are so perfectly fitted that they do not require the skill of a mechanic to manipulate.



Each booth is fitted with an entrance door equipped with spring hinges and interchangeable side or end. The ventilators and openings are provided with slides and doors that close automatically.

A similar booth to the above, except that it is constructed of asbestos, is furnished by the same firm for use in lecture halls or in churches, where it is necessary to take the booth apart and set it up without delay. The asbestos booth has the advantage that it may be stored in a small space.

Peerless Standard Projector

EVERY laboratory which prides itself on the quality of its output knows what a lot of time and effort is required to properly inspect and edit every print before it is sent out to the exchange or purchaser. For this purpose, no other projector can compare with the Peerless for the following reasons:

1. Accessibility and ease of threading.
2. Very small current, with little heat in the lamp.
3. Good, slow projection for cutting and patching scenes.
4. Ease of going back to repeat projection of scenes.

The Peerless Standard Projector is equipped with the eccentric star and cam intermittent movement, giving a 60 degree cam action, with less strain on the film than the ordinary 90 degree star and cam. With this movement, a balanced shutter of three equal 45 degree blades can be used, which completely eliminates all flicker at normal speed, and possesses the additional ability to project at slow speed with no more flicker than occurs in all other projectors at normal speed. This is of great importance where slow speed is desirable for purpose of careful examination of study of a motion picture. The film travels through the projector in a straight line and is in plain sight all the time. In fact it can be cut and patehcd right in the projector with almost as much facility as on the rewind table, thus enabling the editor to reproject it immediately and see that the cutting was properly done.

The Peerless Projector Company of 32 West 43rd Street, also furnish the projector with Enclosing Magazines, if desired. Note particularly that in this type the Magazine itself is hinged instead of the usual cover, thus permitting easy access to the entire circumference of the reel for threading or rewinding.

A New Screen

THE Minusa Cine' Screen Co., St. Louis, Mo., anounce a new departure in the way of projection screens built for exclusive use in connection with Mazda light equipment and known as the Minusa Max-da-lite Screen.

While this surface has been on the market for several years, the Minusa Company have withheld announcement until this time pending expression from the trade who have installed this type of screen. The verdict is unanimous in favor of the Maz-da-lite.

This screen comes in sizes from 3′ x 4′ for the portable home projector to 12′ x 16′ for the modern theatre and is mounted on roll and batten, spring roller or the well known Minusa patent adjustable stretcher frame.

Construction of the Maz-da-lite surface from a scientific standpoint is identical with that of the notable Minusa Gold Fibre screen with the exception of the final finish; which has a greater reflective power, necessary in overcoming the difference in light strength between the Mazda and Arc light.

Experimental research during the current year in behalf of the original metallic screen universally known as the Minusa Gold Fibre has developed a 90 per cent. elimination of the fade-away from a side angle view. This revelation, according to experts is a timely advance in the direction of the eagerly sought for perfect projection.

There Is a Need for System in the Management of Theatres

By Edgar Bauman

IN the early stages, every business operates by hand, or with crude implements and machinery. The most convincing proof that an industry has won recognition is the mechanical aid that has been developed for its up-to-date operation.

Business, generally, has such every-day aides as the telegraph, telephone, the typewriter, and then each individual line of business has such special equipment, as, for example, with railroads, the safety air-brake; in navigation, the wireless; in banking, the adding machine, etc., etc.

The motion picture industry has made such marvelous strides as an industry simply because of the rapid development of the mechanical aides necessary to perfecting picture making.

Mechanical aides are, of course, only created in response to a real need and demand, and when perfect pictures solved the difficulty of attracting crowds, exhibitors turned to the problem of insuring themselves the maximum possible profit from the crowds they attracted, and it was in response to this very real demand that such devices as the ticket selling registers, ticket destroyers, and other mechanical aides for the business end of a theatre were devised.

Insuring a business, and insuring the safety of the profits it should yield, is hardly second to making profits, and exhibitors have been quick to recognize this, and are rapidly availing themselves of the mechanical aid that will help them to safeguard their capital as invested in tickets and their cash as it comes in to the cash desk.

No business man who stops to think can neglect the important matter of effecting savings in his business, because every time a dollar is saved, it is rightly to be regarded as the equivalent of a 10 per cent. profit on $10 business done, and if a mechanical aid eliminates $500 of leaks and losses in a theatre in a year, and that theatre operates on a 10 per cent. net profit basis, that means that this $500 saved is the same as the profit that would have been earned if $5000 more business had been done during the year.

When a business man comes to recognize such vital facts as these, he never hesitates to put money into any mechanical safeguard that will help him to operate his business more efficiently and that will eliminate some of the leaks and losses that are inevitable where there is no exact record of business transactions where money and ticket are handled by hand.

The fact that so many splendid mechanical aides for the business department of a theatre have been perfected in the last decade is a tribute to the importance of the motion picture exhibiting field, and is also a high tribute to the progressiveness of the exhibitor.

Old Gorgon Graham wisely said: "I employ an optimist to get results, and a pessimist to figure them up," so, too, a wise exhibitor is an optimist in employing every possible means of attracting business, and employs mechanical aides that, while they are not exactly pessimistic, register facts and tickets.

The type of men that have forged to the front, as the leading exhibitors of the country, are in themselves a strong argument of the importance of the business side of a theatrical enterprise. These leaders in the motion picture exhibiting field are not flashy P. T. Barnums, but cool-headed shrewd business men, who recognized early in their careers that the test of a successful theatre is not the amount of business it does in a year, but the net profit it yields in that time.

It is net profits from which the exhibitor has to take his income; it is net profits that enabled the single theatre to grow to a chain of theatres; and, just as one of our big business magnates said to a young man: "I do not care how much money you make, but how much you save," so the wise exhibitor does not concern himself simply with how much business he does, but how much actual net profit he gets from this business done.

The fact that almost all progressive and successful theatres employ these mechanical aides is proof in itself that they contribute to the success of an enterprise, and a wise exhibitor employs every available aid trying to build his enterprise to the biggest success it is capable of.

A Film Protector

REALIZING the need existing in many theatres using first run film, for some means by which green film may be run through without trouble, a firm in St. Louis has perfected a device for this purpose called the Werner Film Protector. A sample has been received and given a thorough try out. The result was very satisfactory.

The Protector will be found to give far more satisfactory results than the old method of hand waxing besides being speedier in operation.

Fig. 1 shows the Protector's working position. It is placed on the rewind bench between the two reels in the relative position shown. Sticks of the waxing compound extend through the tubes and are forced against a spacer. The space between ends of sticks of compound will then be the exact width of the picture on the film.

Film Waxer in Operation

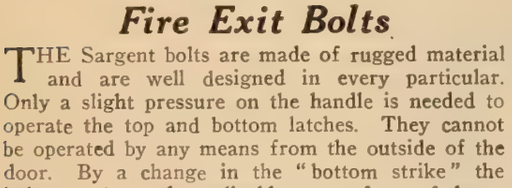
To operate, the film is passed through the rollers over the sticks of compound with emulsion side downward. Due to the position of the device with respect to rewinding reels aided by the weaving path of the film, there is considerable pressure between compound and film strip when the latter is in motion. This pressure causes a certain amount of the wax like compound to be picked up by the edges of the film on emulsion side, forming an excellent lubricant when later used in the projector.

It is needless, here, to set forth the advantage of such protection on new film. Every projectionist who has handled "first run stuff" knows the evils encountered.

The Werner Film Protector is well made and finished and should last for years with ordinary attention. With the projectionist using the average amount of care, the protector will be of real help in any theatre. Its cost is not excessive and the charge of extra sticks of compound slight. All in all, it is a fine piece of equipment and an advantageous buy for those still affected with emulsified tension springs and aperture plates.

Fire Exit Bolts

THE Sargent bolts are made of rugged material and are well designed in every particular. Only a slight pressure on the handle is needed to operate the top and bottom latches. They cannot be operated by any means from the outside of the door. By a change in the "bottom strike" the bolts may be made applicable to any form of threshold and for any threshold material.



The illustration shows the fire exit bolt with cylinder mortise latch and with a door handle on the outside of door. This exit bolt is operated from the inside by a slight pressure on the bar and from the inside by the thumb piece. By means of a key the thumb piece may be set so that the bolt can only be operated from the inside.

The Houseman Printer

THE latest model Housman printer is shown in Fig. 1. This illustration also shows the method of threading up the film wherein the top positive loop is slightly larger than the negative loop at the point where the films leave the feed or top sprocket.

These printers may be equipped with take-up brackets for both negative and positive films, but the manufacturers agree with many users that the fewer number of times the negative is rewound on a take-up the better will be the quality of that film after being used a number of times. For this reason the Housman printer is listed with only the positive take-up.

The cam and its housing which actuates the finger movement are arranged in such a way that there is no danger of irregular movement in these parts, means being provided for automatically taking up all lost motion that might occur at these points, thus assuring rock steady pictures in the finished print.

Static and scratches are eliminated by means of a tension release supplied with the printer. At the same time this arrangement creates the condition that allows the machine to be run at high speed without fear of tearing the sprocket holes.

When the print is being exposed the pressure applied is sufficient to smooth out all roughness which may appear at the perforations.

The test printing clutch—not shown in the illustration—is used for making a positive test print from the negative before making the actual print and is so arranged that by releasing the clutch the machine performs one operation, thereby making one exposure, leaving the shutter closed, thus allowing the operator to extend the light to a point further away and repeat the operation to the extent of six or more exposures. A test piece so made will show a gradual gradation of pictures from one end of the film where the light was close up to the aperture, being dark to the last exposure; where the light was further away being very light, thus allowing the operator to choose the most suitable distance for placing the light to print the entire screen from which the test print was made. This clutch device is thrown out of action by simply turning a small nut and the machine will then run as though equipped with the regular pulley as supplied with the countershaft equipment. In case a battery of printers is used, only one machine is equipped with this test clutch.

The Transverter

FROM reports that can be gathered it seems that the makers of the Transverter are satisfied with the present machine and do not contemplate any material change in its construction and design during the early part of 1920. The factory has been working at top notch speed in an endeavor to catch up with the demand, for the first machines that went out on the market gave such good satisfaction that other machines were ordered.

As the majority of persons interested in the technical equipment of theatres know, the Transverter is a vertical motor generator set used for changing the ordinary alternating current into direct current for the projector arc. Machines for either single arcs or double arcs are made. The latter type is to be preferred for motion picture work because, due to the fact that it is the so-called series arc type, it is possible to operate two arcs at the same time from the single machine. In theatres where the projection is considered to be one of the drawing cards, much attention is paid to the accurate fading out of one reel into another. This requires that the incoming arc be running smoothly at the moment it starts to throw its picture on the screen. With the Transverter this is a simple matter, as no adjustments whatsoever have to be made. A few seconds before the change-over the second arc is struck just as if it were to be run from a separate motor generator set and the design of the Transverter causes the voltage to be automatically brought to the desired point.

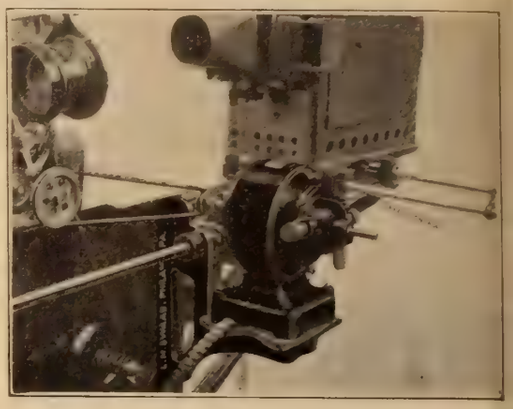
A complete article on the Transverter will appear in an early issue.

Fidelity Electric Co.

AFTER the motion picture machine came into wide use everything connected with it was scrutinized by the alert inventor with the object of bettering the operating conditions, and therefore many appliances were developed which led to a revolution of the original methods.

At one time the safety rules forbade the use of motor drive, but the great advantage of this form of drive over the hand crank forced the use of the electric motor, and this led to its improvement to meet the special conditions.

The Fidelity Electric Co. of Lancaster, Pa., was among the first in the field, and they some time ago put on the market the motor shown in the cut. This motor is enclosed, is well built and carefully insulated, and all outside live points are eliminated. It is easily attached, as shown by the illustration, and by means of a lever placed in front is readily adjusted to the speed requirements of the projection machine.



Fidelity Motor on Projector

It is furnished, as ordered, for direct current or alternating current in any of the commercial frequencies.

The motor and machine as shown was taken from the photograph of L. M. Swaab, Philadelphia, Pa., who markets these outfits in Philadelphia and vicinity.

The Universal M. P. Camera

TO the many excellent features of the Universal motion picture camera there has been added a Built-in Dissolve which is meeting with great favor by professional cameramen everywhere.

The new attachment is extremely simple. The shutter of the Universal is in the form of a rotatable disc having an adjustable sector-shaped opening through which the exposure is made. Suitable mechanism is provided for gradually changing the size of the shutter opening while the camera is in operation. This mechanism is thrown into operation by a control lever on top of the camera. If the control lever is moved forward the shutter starts to open and increase, giving the fade-in effect. If the control lever is moved backward the shutter opening gradually decreases, producing a fade-out effect.

At the back of the camera is a shutter indicator which gives a graphic indication of the shutter opening at all times. This is only one of the features on the Universal that has helped to make the camera so well known in the world of the motion picture.

Other points of interest about this camera are also of interest. For instance, it is a fact that every moving part of the Universal is connected to one main casting, a feature of construction that insures permanent optical adjustment. The camera cases are all of reinforced aluminum and seasoned selected hardwood especially treated to eliminate warping. One large master gear drives all moving parts on the Universal; furthermore there are no projecting parts to make the camera cumbersome and unwieldy.

Newman's Recent Installations

THE Newman Manufacturing Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, and Chicago, Ill., have installed at the Auditorium Theatre some very beautiful hand carved wood Photo Display Cabinets, with hinged glass doors around the front entrance columns, also a hand carved Ticket Booth of the Dolphin design.

The Newman Company are also installing at the Mecca Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, some very attractive metal Unit Display Cabinets in the statuary bronze finish which does not require polishing.

Westinghouse Electric & Mfg Co.
Los Angeles,Cal.

Gentlemen:

We wish to advise that the Type CS, three phase Westinghouse motor generator set purchased from you in May 1917, has been in daily use.

Since its installation it has not cost us one cent for repairs, and is in as good condition as the day we put it in.

We have been told that our projection compares favorably with that of any house in the Southwest, and we do know that we have been free from the light troubles of the average small town showman.

We expect to open a house in new territory within the next year, and will be very glad to install one of your generators when the time comes.

Very truly,

E. L. Franck

The above letter speaks for itself.

Ajo is located in the very center of the Arizona desert, miles from any where. A break-down of equipment in such a location would mean a tie-up of several weeks before new parts could be obtained.

You, Mr. Owner, may be more favorably located. But isn't this dependability just as important to you; why not make it your first consideration?

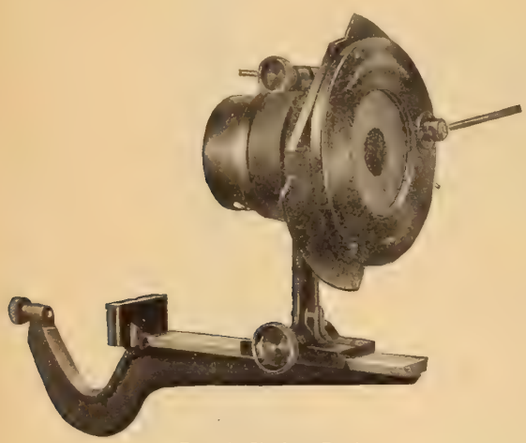
New Goerz Amber Celluloid Blade Round Dissolve

ANOTHER addition to the Goerz Dissolve Effect Devices is the Goerz Amber Blades Dissolving & Vignetting Device, similar to our well known Goerz Round Closing Dissolving Device, but instead, as the name indicates, of the steel diaphragm leaves, as employed in the regular device, is furnished with amber colored celluloid diaphragm blades. These blades do not shut out the light entirely, when the shutter is closed, but give the finished picture (positive) the effect of a scene taken on a foggy day. When the amber diaphragm is opened up for a certain spot or vignette, the picture taken through the free opening will be exposed correctly while the portion covered by the celluloid leaves will be underexposed. The finished picture (positive) will show a darker circle around a perfect exposed picture, through which the action in the picture can still be seen. It will have the appearance of a spotlight and is for this very reason often also called spotlight effect.

Not this effect alone can be obtained, many other pleasing effects may be obtained by the use of the sliding base, or the Regular Goerz Round dissolve in connection with the Amber Dissolve, by use of an intermediate adapter. One can make double exposed circles, circle dissolves or corner dissolves or use both devices alternately.

In short, there is a new field opened for the inventive cameraman.

ALTHOUGH Goerz is the manufacturer of a number of devices for use in professional cinematography, space forbids a lengthy description of the entire line at this time. Two will be mentioned—the Round Closing Dissolving and vignetting device and the Double Exposure Attachment.



Round Closing Device

The Round Closing Dissolving and Vignetting Device is shown in the illustration with its hask box attachment removed and mounted on a Bell and Howell Front Vignetting attachment. This device is especially designed for use on B. & H. cameras and has proven to be a marked success. The B. & H. Vignetting attachment is clamped under the tripod tilt and is the same as is furnished by the B. & H. company. In place of the extension tube, Goerz furnishes a short tube for the vignetting attachment and the cost of this tube is included in the price of the sliding base.

Double exposures have become so common that the cinematographer must have a double exposure device in his kit for use when called upon. The Goerz device is mounted on an extension tube and sliding base together with Round Dissolving and Vignetting Device and Mask Box Attachment. This device may be attached to any make of camera which is already fitted with the other devices just mentioned. The double exposure device is a separate attachment which is interchangeable with the Goerz square closing Dissolving Device.

B. & H. Cinema Equipment

IN line with the established policy of the Bell & Howell Company of supplying motion picture machinery par-excellent to the producer and laboratory man, the ensuing year holds promise of important developments of far reaching consequence to the industry in general and the contemplated user of cinema machinery in particular.

The engineering facilities of this organization are ever on the alert for improvements and additions to the already staple line and are constantly showing material results of these assiduous research efforts by effecting minor changes that contribute toward the betterment of the apparatus.

Starting twelve years ago with the manufacturing of projection machines in view, it was soon found that the needs of the producer were more urgent and afforded a more fertile field for the inventor and pioneer laying the foundation of the industry. The feasability of this charge was soon proven conclusively by the increasing demand for the first machine made which was the perforator and from that period to the present time the inability of the manufacturers to keep pace with the steadily increasing demand stands as an undisputed tribute to their meritorious qualities.

The development to the present magnitude while meteoric in the extreme is only characteristic of many other successful units involved in the art of picture making. This can all the more truly be said of the production end as is evident by the rapid strides made in story construction and along directorial lines in the astonishing short space of a few years. The days when the five hundred foot comedy was the headliner and the novelty of the science held sway with one's imagination seems only a fortnight ago and in contrast to this is the silent drama of today, a complete entertainment in itself instead of a filler in between performances.

During this period of development there was an unmistakable difference between the circumstances surrounding the efforts of the producer and those interested in the mechanical side of the industry. Obviously, both had to consider the ultimate consumer which from the producer's standpoint was the public. If one production slightly exceeded its predecessor in tenacity of plot or thrilling climax, its superiority was immediately acclaimed by the public, in most cases before the final print left the cutting room. But, had the manufacturers of machinery such a ready audience or such buoyant influences? He first had to pass through an expensive experimental stage and after finally marketing the product was required to enlist all the available gray matter to impress on his prospective customers, the producer, what was needed in the way of economical equipment. This idea of ecenomy was difficult to convey owing to the apparent enormous returns for a picture and its resultant effect on the makers, whose sweet dreams of sudden prosperity completely eclipsed the basic principle, namely, that of cost regulation which had to be considered first. However, thanks to the sound minded builders of the industry who held to the more conservative business methods and always had one eye on "economy-in-the-making."

In keeping with this the high degree of efficiency and the parts played by Bell & Howell apparatus along the entire line from the making of the picture with the camera and including perforators, printers, splicing and measuring machines hold an undisputed place in contributing to the final make-up of the completed picture. This entire line is so well known that little need be said other than a slight perusal of their important features, many of which are of recent addition.

Fulco Predicts Great Year

THE E. E. Fulton Company, under the able guidance of E. E. Fulton and his sons, Carl, L. M. and Ralph, widely known to the moving picture world as the "Fulco Four," is closing a year of splendid achievement and is looking forward to even greater things in 1920. The father and three sons work together like parts of a well oiled machine and have made themselves famous for service and their close personal touch with the trade.

Despite the expansion of their plant during 1919, orders are piling up faster than they can be filled, and equipment to further expand the capacity of the Fulton factory has been ordered for the new year, much of it to be rushed by express. New lines are being continually added, and it is the intention of the E. E. Fulton Company ultimately to manufacture and supply everything in the accessory field, except projection machines and generator sets. Work is now progressing on new accessories of great interest to the moving picture industry as a whole, and some surprises are promised in the near future.

Among the improvements to be made shortly after the new year is the installation of an up-to-date display and demonstrating floor, showing fireproof booths, machines, Speedco arc controls, and all of the numerous devices being manufactured by the Fulton Company. The chemical department also will be enlarged to meet the demand for its various products, including their famous cement.

Mr. E. E. Fulton, who is one of the veterans of the moving picture industry and one of the leaders in safety propaganda, speaking of developments of the past year, said he was impressed with the awakening of theatre men to the necessity of safeguarding the public by purchasing the best equipment, even going further than required by the local ordinances in many cases. Another forward step made by the exhibitors is their realization of the necessity of the finest possible projection, as is evidenced by their willingness to spend money freely to secure it.

Mr. Fulton does not pose as a prophet, but believes that the best year in the history of the moving picture and accessory industry is ahead of us, and is clearing the decks for action at his plant in order to keep up with the demand for Fulco products which he foresees.

A Slide Container

D. R. S., St. Catherine, Ont.: Am sending you a question about how to obtain better results on A. C.

I also have a good little idea for keeping slides, The bottom and front are carved out to allow slide to pass through. Carve a little out of the bottom so you can get your forefinger under slide to pull it out. The box I have sketched here is a double one for two sets of slides.

Reply: D. R. S. sent a sketch which might have been reproduced but seems to us to be hardly necessary because of the clearness of his description. A scheme of this sort should find ready use in a large number of projection rooms where, at the present time, slides are thrown around and laid about without system.

D. R. S.'s question on A. C. was answered at length several weeks ago while the News was being published in the smaller size. If he did not see the answer we will repeat it in some future issue.

A. F. Victor Backs A Theory With Cash—The Hardest Talk Known

His Belief in the Safety Standard Leads to the Formation of New Company

AN event of considerable interest to everyone interested in the non-theatrical branch of the industry is the formation of the Victor Safety Film Corporation.

The intent and purpose of the new corporation is a specialized film service applicable to the needs of the users of portable projectors. The creation of such a service is of tremendous importance and interest to all those using motion pictures outside the professional theatre.

The non-theatrical branch of the "movie" industry has heretofore been in somewhat the same predicament as the youngest member of a large family—compelled to use the cut-downs and made over outfits of its larger brothers, the result being frequently none too successful.

How best to realize and materialize the wonderful possibilities of the educational field for motion pictures is a problem which has at one time or another occupied the interest of practically every person connected with the industry.

Manufacturers of projectors, producers of film, have one and all been approached by eager prospective users of their products. People seeking with the keenest interest how to take motion pictures into their schools, churches, clubs factories and homes. The users saw the tremendous capabilities for service to them of the motion picture; manufacturers saw the wealth of the field for their output.

The user and the manufacturer have been struggling to make supply and demand coincide, but the result has been by no means perfect.

There have been so many aspects to the problem; and the tools with which we sought to solve them were too unwieldy for the field. We attempted to carry into the educational field the same apparatus and equipment which had been so ideal in the amusement field. It was like confusing the field of service of the passenger automobile and the motor truck—a case of attempting to take our guests to the opera in a delivery truck.

An equipment may be absolutely perfect in serving its own field, and become nothing but an aggravation and a menace when transferred to a field of different requirements but related interest.

The educational and amusement ends of the industry are related by their interests in motion pictures, and hopelessly divided by the difference in their needs of presentation.

To the theatre the projector is a permanent institution, an actual part of the architectural construction. It is lined up with the screen angle, specially wired with its heavy cable, and its extreme weight firmly anchored to the cement floor of its fire-proof booth—all adequate and logical features for a machine whose place of service is definitely located. Absolute safety, perfect screen results—a wonderful tribute to the ingenuity of the human mind.

But attempt to take this splendid servant into the college where it is needed first in one class room and then another; or apply its use to factory advertising where it must be taken from place to place by a salesman, or into your home, where it must make its appearance in your drawing room gracefully, and its exit conveniently, and you have the most awkward and aggravating conditions confronting you. And if its portability is essential, how much more important is the element of safety. Not one tithe of the latter quality can be sacrificed. In the center of a crowded church, in the class room where the machine is frequently operated by one of the students, in your own home, surrounded by your children—the machine MUST have every element of safety. The portable projector must protect its users are thoroughly as the professional machine in the theatre.

To do this and retain its portability was the nut the manufacturers were called upon to crack.

To make a portable machine to use professional standard film and meet all the requirements of safety, was to make a portable machine that required a motor truck as a porter! On the other hand, to make a portable machine, using professional standard film, that was really portable, meant to strip it of all the safety equipment prescribed by the Board of Underwriters, which so adequately protects the operator and audience in the theatre. The result was a product which was an outlaw, serving its users clandestinely and precariously.

Another angle of this dilemma of many difficulties has been the fact that there was no inspiration for the production of purely educational film. So long as the projectors were many of them classed as outlaws, the producers shied at the idea of investing their money in film production—the vehicle for projection was too uncertain. To be a healthy growth, a business must be ethically and legally sound. Otherwise it is like the manufacturer of moonshine whiskey—stealthy, punitive action.

In spite of its many handicaps the field has been a lucrative one. People in every condition of life are keenly alive to the power of the screen. It is a vivid, visual argument, powerful in any direction it is launched. In spite of the meagre supply of film, in spite of the awkward and often hazardous means of projection, users have been begging for the means of bringing the potent force of the "movie" in our schools, churches, clubs, factories and homes. There has, of course, been a very large percentage of users who have found the large, heavy projectors impractical for their purposes, and who have refused to compromise on safety and accept the smaller machines from which the heavy fireproof booth and other accessories have been eliminated. And this class of user has been steadily increasing, and is waiting today for the equipment to meet their needs and requirements.

The recent action of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, in adopting a special standard safety film for use with portable projectors, is a movement of singular distance in the right direction. The simple fact of adopting a special standard to meet the requirements of the portable field clears away the confusing tangle of underbrush and gives open way to field of wonderful fertility.

The new standard safety film does away with the need of the fireproof booth, which has been such a hampering feature in the portable field. The new standard safety film removes the element of hazard from those projectors which were evading the responsibility of safeguarding their users. The safety standard film furnishes a definite field of production for educational film and a certain legal outlet for that film.

Educators, business men, clergymen, any one, anywhere with a message to put over, are turning eagerly to the motion picture as the most powerful and most flexible messenger. It is the greatest linguist of all times.

They have seen what an influence for good or evil it has been capable of exerting in the amusement field, and they are anxious to give it more serious work to do.

Educators have found that a student's attention is caught and his imagination intrigued more by the eye than the ear. Clergymen are realizing that it takes more than age old dogma to hold the interest of their congregations and are looking for suitable film of special interest to their following.

Manufacturers have discovered that a "movie" of their plant and processes argues more logically than the glibbest of salesmen.

Clubs are keen on the idea of exhibiting in their rooms special film, or subjects, representatives of the interests of their members.

Fastidious people, wishing to act as censors of their own "movies," are seeking the equipment which will bring the pictures they desire into their homes.

To each type of user, the Victor Safety Film Corporation offers a service studiously cognizant of his individual needs.

Travel, science, classical drama, religious subjects and good, clean entertainment are all to be found in the New Victor library.

All Victor subjects are produced on Safety Standard Film for use without booth and are available for use with all projectors employing the Safety Standard.

A New Box Office Sign

THE illustration shows a box office ticket-rate sign recently put on the market by Behrend, of the Moving Picture Supply Co., of New York. Briefly, the sign consists of a metal plate fastened on to a wood base and a number of interchangeable tabs which slide into a slot between the wood and the metal.

Some time ago, with the advent of the war tax, Mr. Behrend saw the need for a neat, durable interchangeable sign for hanging in the box office. Managers immediately appreciated the value of the interchangeable feature and the sign as a result has had a ready sale.

Both metal face and ticket tabs are of brass, with the lettering and figures etched in by acid. The wood is finished in mahogany, which, with the brass, furnishes an attractive combination.

In operation the sign is extremely simple, hardly requiring an explanation. With each sign as it leaves the factory there are furnished a set of five tabs, selected by the buyer for any combination of ticket prices.

Amusement Supply Company Busy with Orders

THE Amusement Supply Company, Chicago's up-to-date Supply House reports the following installations of "The Motiograph."

VICTOR FILM

Safety Standard Film Service

PICTURES PRODUCED SPECIALLY AND SOLELY FOR THE NON-THEATRICAL USER

To be thoroughly effective, service must be intelligently applied to the individual requirements of a specified field.

Recognizing the broad field of activity represented by the non-theatrical branch of the motion picture industry; and realizing the existing lack of any individualized service in that field, the Victor Safety Film Corporation has assembled the largest film library in the world, representative of the needs of educational, religious, community and home users.

The best in classic literature, the exact in science, the wholesome in entertainment, and special religious subjects produced under the personal supervision of various clergymen; are assembled in a library comprehensive of the needs of the individual user.

Each Victor subject is produced only on Safety Standard reels, adopted by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and approved by the Underwriters' Laboratories for use without fire-proof booth. The only Standard which can legally and universally be used without fire-proof booth—another detail of the Victor special service for non-theatrical users.

Albany Theatrical Supply Company

THE Albany Theatre Supply Company occupies considerable space in the building located at 4 Clinton avenue, Albany, N. Y. These quarters, ideally located, are familiar to all engaged in the motion picture industry in and around the Capitol City.

Mr. C. C. Charles, well-known film executive, is president of this progressive concern, of which Mr. Fred P. Elliott and Charles McLaughlin are treasurer and secretary respectively.

A full line of Simplex machines and accessories, together with up-to-date theatre supplies are always on hand, and the headquarters of this company are the favorite meeting-place for the majority of out-of-town exhibitors.

Mr. Charles since his connection with this enterprising company has ably demonstrated that an up-to-date supply house was a local neccssity, and the number of Simplex machines installed by the Albany Theatre Supply Company run into very high figures since this company took hold of the exploitation of that well-known machine.

A partial list of Simplex installations made by the Albany Theatre Supply Company includes:

Proctor's Harmanus Bleecker Hall..Albany, N. Y
Albany theatre.....Albany, N. Y.
Congress theatre.....Saratoga Springs, N. Y.
Cohoes Opera House.....Cohoes, N. Y.
Liberty theatre.....Herkimer, N. Y.
Lyceum theatre.....Amsterdam, N. Y.

Seattle Stage Lighting Company

IN 1907 Mr. W. H. Winters started in the electrical supply and equipment business in a small room located at the rear of the Grand theatre, Seattle. In this section of the country all men are particularly gauged by their ability to accomplish things as well as their manner of treatment of all whom they deal with.

Through the years of unfailing good service and uniformly generous and fair treatment, Mr. Winters built up a supply business which stands today as the best of its kind in the Northwest section of the land.

Several years ago the Seattle Stage Lighting Company, of which Mr. Winters is the head, was appointed Simplex Distributor for the States of Washington and Oregon. As had been the custom of the Simplex folks in the selection of only the best qualified being chosen to market their product, the Seattle Stage Lighting Company came up to every expectation, and can truly be said to have planted the Simplex banner where such planting was little dreamed of.

Located at 21 Madison Block, the headquarters of this company contain every high grade theatre equipment line that is marketed, and this quality of merchandise, together with the beforementioned policy of endeavor, has enabled Mr. Winters to number among his customers almost every large house of note in the Pacific Northwest, as well as fully 89 per cent. of the smaller ones, in each of which he has successfully installed Simplex.

Mr. Winters reports considerable and highly gratifying success with the new Simplex Mazda equipment, which he is rapidly installing in the non-theatrical field, notably the schools. Among the most prominent installations made in recent days in this territory are the beautiful Liberty theatre at Wenatchee, Wash., and those of the Mercy Amusement Company of Yakima, Wash., which latter are included in the famous Mercy Circuit.

A few of the recent Simplex installations effected by the Seattle Stage Lighting Company are included the following:

Star theatre.....Seattle, Wash.
Gem theatre.....Seattle, Wash.
Liberty theatre.....Seattle, Wash.
Victory theatre.....Seattle, Wash.
Victory theatre.....Tacoma, Wash.
Everett theatre.....Everett, Wash.
Flag theatre.....Seattle, Wash.
Class A theatre.....Seattle, Wash.
Oak theatre.....Seattle, Wash.
Rialto theatre.....Seattle, Wash.
Star theatre.....Everett, Wash.
And many others in Bremerton, Port Angeles, Granger, Aberdeen and Mt. Vernon.

Webster Electric Company

HAT district including Washington, D. C., as well as western Maryland and northern Virginia for the exclusive distribution of Simplex Projectors is covered by the Webster Electric Company of Washington, D. C.

Located in the heart of the theatre district of our National Capital, at 719 Ninth street, N. W., the Webster Company is in splendid position to maintain the services for which it is noted throughout the territory.

Mr. G. G. Webster, head of the Webster Electric Company, maintains a policy of keeping personally in touch with every one of his customers, which policy has been found to be highly successful.

At Baltimore, Md., the Webster Electric Company have established an agency in the concern of Haefele & Co., whose headquarters at the Gayety Theatre Building are familiar to all exhibitors throughout Baltimore.

Since the taking over of the Simplex franchise for the exclusive sales rights in the district, the Webster Company have planted the Simplex banner in many theatres in Washington, a partial list of which is herewith given:

Metropolitan theatre.....Washington, D. C.
Truxton theatre.....Washington, D. C.
Criterion theatre.....Washington, D. C.
Blue Mouse theatre.....Washington, D. C.
Jewel theatre.....Washington, D. C.
Hiawatha theatre.....Washington, D. C.
Foraker theatre.....Washington, D. C.
Crandall's Apollo theatre.....Washington, D. C.
Howard theatre.....Washington, D. C.
Staunton theatre.....Washington, D. C.
Savoy theatre.....Washington, D. C.
York theatre.....Washington, D. C.

Others are the Victoria and Liberty at Cumberland, Md., the Palace and Wilson at Baltimore, the Star at Shenandoah, and the Liberty at Hagerstown.

Mr. Webster is highly confident that his arrangements which are pending in various Government circles as well as those proposed for further activities in the amusement and miscellaneous field, will spell unqualified success for his concern in 1920.

Lucas Theatre Supply Company

THE Lucas Theatre Supply Company of 158 Marietta Street, Atlanta, Ga., covers through one single office practically the largest territorial space of any Simplex distributors.

The States included in the Simplex Franchise held by the Lucas Company are North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Tennessee, and Southern Virginia. It can be seen that only through the maintenance of the most up-to-date and highest type of efficient organization could such an extensive territory be served and that the Simplex sales made through the Atlanta office during the past several years have increased by leaps and bounds can be considered a personal tribute to the progressiveness and personal administration of the General Manager of the world's largest supply house, Mr. Harry K. Lucas.

The Teco Products Mfg. Company

THE newest addition to the great Simplex Distributing Family is the Teco Products Mfg. Company of Minneapolis, Minn.

Prominent in the affairs of this bustling concern is Mr. J. George Feinberg whose connections with other supply houses in the past have thoroughly qualified him to analyze the needs and requirements of his trade, while Mr. L. H. Francis, his associate, has also brought to the Teco Company the fruits of years of activities in the supply field.

Northern and Eastern Iowa as well as Northern and Western Wisconsin is the territory covered in the Simplex franchise held by this company and the many theatres equipped by this distributing company stand as examples of the thoroughness with which every phase of the equipment business is covered by these Simplex boosters.

Besides a highly efficient Repair Department and a striking exhibition of Simplex machines and accessories the Teco offices contain many beautiful examples of plastic art and lobby displays that are manufactured also by this company.

The large force of employees provide for the rendering of the much-talked-of "Teco Service" which, by the way, assures the purchaser of supplies that his order will be filled on the same day that it is received.

The many Simplex installations effected by the Messrs. Feinberg & Francis are the source of gratification to all concerned. The highly successful methods of business administration pursued by the Teco Company and their standing in the supply field is best illustrated by the fact that the executives of the big Finkelstein-Rubin interests have but recently given the Teco Company orders for standardizing their entire circuit of theatres and have placed an initial order of twenty-four Type "S" Simplex machines toward that end.

One of the latest adjuncts to the Teco Company is the issuance of their new house organ which is published monthly. This interesting periodical is edited by Mr. Feinberg and is called the "Teco Tattler." The first edition of this "Tatler" appeared some weeks ago and was so decidedly popular among the mailing list of the Teco Company that the December issue is being waited for with the keenest anticipation.

The Teco officials will shortly announce a new system of business getting which embodies plans that will prove irresistible to exhibitors throughout the Teco territory and will more than ever plant permanently the banner of the Simplex by the Teco company whose efforts have already established this company in the regular category of up-to-date Simplex distributors.

Leland Theatre Supply Company

THE Leland Theatre Supply House which is known as a northern New England theatrical landmark, has been officially designated as exclusive Simplex distributors for the past two years, prior to that time machines of all makes having been handled and sold.

The Leland Theatre Supply Company's headquarters are located at 97 State street, Montpelier, Vt., and it is from this point that the fame of the Simplex is heralded through Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont by Mr. John Leland who spends most of his time on the road.

The other member of the House of Leland is Mrs. Leland whose activities in the supply field are as well known as are those of her husband. It is Mrs. Leland who operates the business from the Montpeliar office, attending to the thousands of details that are a part of the theatre supply business with the thoroughness and dispatch that very few men could hope to equal.

At the Montpelier headquarters is maintained the theatrical supply house as well as the Repair Department to take care of the immediate wants of the Simplex users and through the perseverance of the Simplex Combination this territory which a few years ago one must needs have looked sharp for a Simplex now boasts of a number of large cities that are one hundred per cent Simplex, while the large and representative houses in the territory have equipped their theatres with the machine marked "Simplex."

An important circuit in northern New England controlled by Mr. William Gray of Lewiston, Me., whose partner is Bill Carrigan of baseball fame and which numbers forty theatres has been Simplexized through the activities of the Leland Theatre Supply House.

Among the many small communities prevailing in this district where alternating current conditions are numerous the Simplex Madza equipment has been recently popularized through personal demonstrations that Mr. Leland has staged in the past year.

The Boston Motion Picture Supply Company

THE Boston Motion Picture Supply Company is located at No. 54 Broadway, which street runs directly through the center of the film district of this City of beans and culture.

Mr. Harry Asher, one of the oldest and best known New England film executives, is the President of the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company which holds the exclusive Simplex distributing rights in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut. Branch offices of this widely known concern are also located in the Strand Theatre Building, Providence, R. I., while the Connecticut Moving Picture Supply Company of New Haven, Conn., represent the Boston Company in the nutmeg State.

Miss Rose Asher is the nominal head of the Boston office. It is from this office that the bulk of the supply business is transacted and it is also here that the majority of New England exhibitors come to replenish their theatre supplies.

Mr. Joseph Cifre, former President of the Boston Motion Picture Operators Union who has but recently returned from war duties in France, has again picked up the reins of business which the war had caused him to drop and now greets his old customers once more as head of the sales force, while Mr. Carl Berry rounds up Simplex prospects on the outside.

The thoroughly equipped repair shop maintained at the Boston office is under the capable supervision of Mr. Dan Dalziel, New England's well known repair and installation expert. Besides carrying a complete stock of modern and up-to-date theatre equipment of all descriptions on hand, the Boston office boasts also of a beautiful screening room handsomely furnished which meets with the popular approval of the film men in the district who gather here daily.

The sales of Simplex Projectors in this territory have been exceedingly heavy and through the creditable work of the Boston distributors it is said that with but two exceptions Washington street, the Broadway of the Hub, is 100% Simplex, while the majority of larger houses in the industrial cities throughout this territory are using Simplex sold through the Boston office.

With but one exception everyone of the nineteen film exchanges in the film district of Boston have been equipped with Simplex through the efforts of the Boston distributors.

Erker Brothers Optical Company

LOCATED on Olive street which is the leading thoroughfare of St. Louis is the House of Erker which for years has been known as the most prominent optical concern of this enterprising Mid Western city.

The Erker Brothers Optical Company of which A. P. Erker, Esq., is president was chosen as distributors of Simplex Projectors in this district owing to their standing in the supply business, and the activities of this concern in behalf of the Simplex has more than substantiated the good judgment in the making of this appointment.

The headquarters of the Erkers Bros., Optical Company are located at 608 Olive street which location is familiar to even the pioneers of the industry.

Mr. H. G. Lihou is in charge of the Sales Department of the House of Erker and is likewise known to the trade on account of his long and intimate connections with the supply business.

The Erker Bros., Optical Company represent Simplex in Eastern Missouri, Northeastern Arkansas as well as the counties of Monroe, Madison and St. Clair in Illinois.

Among the beautiful theatres which have been equipped by the Erker Bros., Optical Company are the following:

St. Louis Down-Town Houses:

Columbia, Strand, Broadway, Grand Opera House, Royal, Lyric, Orpheum, Central, Rainbow and Variety, and many others.

Some miscellaneous users of Simplex Projectors in St. Louis:

Engineers Club, Cleveland High School, Central High School, Union M. E. Church, Holy Trinity Church, Church of Our Lady of Perpetual Succor.

B. F. Porter

B. F. PORTER, known to thousands of film supply men throughout not only New York but the amusement world generally as the "Tiffany of the Trade," is the Simplex Distributor for greater New York city, northern New Jersey while Dutchess, Putnam, Orange, Suffolk and Rockland counties in New York state are also included in the Simplex territory covered by this energetic and hustling supply man.

For a long time Mr. B. F. Porter's show windows in Times Square showed two specially finished and illuminated Simplex Projectors and held the attention of thousands of home-coming and after-the-show New Yorkers while since Mr. Porter's removal into the Godfrey Building the big changeable electric sign atop this structure spells out illuminated messages upon the black background of the midnight sky to thousands and can be read at great distances telling of the achievement of "Porter on the Square."

Mr. Porter is now located on the 7th Avenue side of the New York City quarters of the International Cinequipment center occupying the entire second floor of the Godfrey building which building by day and night resembles nothing more closely than a veritable beehive of motion picture activities.

Here is located the famous model projection room which contains four types of Simplex Projectors of various models as well as a wiring system that includes voltages ranging from thirty to two hundred and twenty volts both alternating and direct current. Here too may be found the very latest appliances used in the modern projection rooms, which Mr. Porter invariably includes in high class installations.

Hardly a large theatre in or around New York City has been constructed or opened within the past half-dozen years that Mr. B. F. Porter has not had something to do with in the matter of equipment, while the road shows of Griffith, Ince and other nationally known makers of film whose productions have been taken on the road have had their equipment furnished them through the House of Porter.

The Rialto, Rivoli, Strand—Brooklyn, as well as the latest New York City masterpiece of theatre building—the Capitol have also had their projection rooms equipped under B. F. Porter's personal supervision.

In the Lead and Going Strong

WHEN a business, started by young men without any partcular "pull," forges right ahead and takes a leading place in the commercial world, it is fair to admit that there was a need for such a business. And yet, if the men who started the Exhibitors Supply Company in July of 1915 had not been keen, clear-cut, and inherently honest, their business could not have shown the remarkable growth indicated by the following facts:

July, 1915—Started in business in Chicago in a small office—300 square feet of floor space.

May, 1916—Moved to larger quarters—600 squar feet of flor space.

January, 1917—Again doubled their floor space—taking 1,200 square feet.

July, 1917—Established a branch at 157 N. Illinois street, Indianapolis, with R. E. Gumm in charge.

February, 1918—Opened another branch at 133 Second street, Milwaukee, with C. E. Bunce in charge.

April, 1919—Again moved to larger quarters, this time taking the entire second floor of the Famous players-Lasky Building, 845 So. Wabash avenue, Chicago, where they are now located. Floor space 4,000 square feet. Here they combined general offices, a sales room, stock and shipping room.

August, 1919—Opened a branch at 3,308 Olive street, St. Louis, under the management of A. B. Lombard.

We are informed that plans are well under way for the establishment of still another branch, which will be accomplished within the next 30 days.

Messrs. Dutton, Douglas, and Lincoln, who are responsible for this progress, are not given to boasting, but we happen to know that their business has practically doubled every year since they started—even in 1918 when the "flu" epidemic caused the closing of practically all theatres, the country over, for weeks. And there is no indication of anything less than a 100% increase for the current year.

J. Slipper & Co.

J. SLIPPER & CO., 728 So. Olive street, Los Angeles, California, have been dealers of the Simplex machines for over four years. Their place of business is in the center of "Film Row," and they have one of the largest motion picture supply houses in the West, carrying a full line of all theatre equipment. Theirs was the first supply house in the United States to establih a projection room open to the general public for the previewing of pictures. They employ two operators the year round, and manufacture articles for the trade.

Hollis, Smith, Morton Co.

THOMAS PARKER HOLLIS, president of the company, spent twenty-seven years with the Anchor Nail & Tack Co., 19th S. S. Pgh., is a mechanic of ability, this being quite necessary to make and grind tools in the making of tacks. He also carried a stationary engineer's license, was foreman of the shop. The experience thus gained was a big asset in taking up the repair of motion picture machines. Mr. Hollis was first introduced to the motion picture industry in 1909, his first job inspecting film for the old Pennsylvania Film Exchange, 125 Fourth avenue, shortly after they moved from the Lewis Block at Smithfield and Sixth avenue. He remained in this capacity till some time after the General Film Company purchased the entire holding of Rowland & Clark, and Warner & Landie, involving the Pittsburgh Calcium Light and Film Company, Pgh. Calcium Light & Film Co., Penna Film Exchange, and the Duquesne Film Co., with offices and warerooms at 119 Fourth avenue, and 436 Fourth avenue. Mr. Hollis, went to 436 Fourth avenue, George building, with H. B. Miller as manager. Shortly after this merger, Mr. Hollis took charge of the repair and supply department, in which he labored till the spring of 1915, when he rented an upper room at 434 Fourth avenue, doing repair work and selling supplies.

On July 10th, H. J. Smith allied himself with Mr. Hollis, under the firm of Hollis & Smith. This firm outgrew its quarters and signed a lease for its present location, long before the building was completed, moved to its present location in November, 1917.

Harvey C. Hollis, treasurer of the company, as his brother was a tackmaker, and an expert mechanic, having served many years making tacks and nails, accepted a position as repairman with the Feature Film & Calcium Light Co., in 1912.

Edward B. Morton, secretary of the company, for nine years prior to his entering the motion picture machine and supply business was affiliated with the Standard Sanitary Mfg. Company, in the capacity of designer and draughtsman, is quite an architect and a valuable man to all exhibitors who contemplate changes in their theatre.

Henry J. Smith, vice-president and general manager, spent twelve years in the wholesale grocery business, in the packing room for W. K. Gillespie, and Gillespie, Curee Company, Pittsburgh, Pa. (By the way, James B. Clark, of Rowland & Clark, was the bookkeeper, and James Steel, formerly vice-president of the Famous Players Film Company and Paramount Film Corporation, but now owner of a chain of theatres, was the shipping clerk). He was the first mechanic to rebuild Edison 2-pin machines to 1-pin in Pittsburgh, doing the work as perfect as the Edison Company, and saving transportation charges and from ten days to two weeks time in delivery. At that time, Edison 2-pin, Kineloscope, Lubin machine, Powers 5 and Motiograph Universal Machines were the stand-bys. Edison 1-pin exhibition model was just coming on the market.

About 1910 or 1911, a Simplex was brought to Pittsburgh, Pa., by Mr. E. M. Porter, demonstrations were given. Machine was installed in the Cameraphone, down town, but was not looked on with much favor. Smith himself could not be persuaded at the time and passed it up. Some time after this, the General Film Company was organized; ht months after this a corporation was formed by Clark, Rowland, Davis & Miller; Ben Jones as manager, and Smith still repairman. James Steele was then brought from Cincinnati, O., to take charge. Shortly after Steel, with other interests, organized the Famous Players Film Co., and Smith became manager of the Feature Film & Calcium Light Co., and remained in same position until he affiliated himself with T. P. Hollis at 434 Fourth avenue, as Hollis & Smith, and thus till the present day.

MR. FRANK ELLIOTT, MANAGER

Buffalo Simplex Distributor Highly Successful

ONE of the most progressive theatre supply houses in New York State is The Becker Theatre Supply Company, located at 184 Franklin street, Buffalo, N. Y. This concern, of which Mr. "Al." Becker is proprietor and manager, represents the Simplex selling agency for Western New York State. The Becker Theatre Supply Company is located in the centre of the film district of Buffalo and is especially conspicuous in the way of attractive window displays and the continuous exhibition of up-to-date theatre equipment and accessories.

Mr. Becker, whose activities in the film business around Western New York are well known to all local men in the industry, is building up a splendid equipment and supply trade through his insistence of rendering prompt and efficient service to his customers by his entire organization.

The Becker Theatre Supply Company includes as a part of its establishment a well-equipped repair shop, where, under the capable administration of Mr. William Johnson electrical repairs and alterations are skilfully effected. The department is fitted up with necessary machinery such as upright drills, lathes, presses, etc., for the careful repair work which the working mechanism of the Projector requires.

The ground floor of the House of Becker also contains well appointed and good sized screening room where numerous exhibitors congregate during the screening or running-off of the various film subjects. Mr. Becker's private office likewise occupies a section of this floor where he is at all times glad to meet the exhibitors of his territory and talk over with them the latest developments in the way of Projection Room Equipment.

The number of Simplex Projectors recently installed in Western New York State is highly gratifying to Mr. Becker and bespeak popularity and success of The Becker Organization.

Exhibitors Supply Company of Milwaukee

MR. C. E. BUNCE, Mgr., reports:

To date we have sold forty machines that are giving complete satisfaction in every case and a large quantity of Simplex Incandescent equipments. Practically every new theatre built in our territory has seen fit to choose the Simplex as their selection for a Projector to produce the most perfect results on their screens, as well as to stand up under the continual grind subjected to under conditions such as are maintained nowadays in the operation of our best theatres. We might state that the downtown area of Milwaukee is booked solid with the Simplex, all of which are operating from early morning hours until late in the evening.

The above record, while not seeming to be an exceptional large number of machines to be installed in ten months, is exceedingly so, in as much as our territory until recently was confined to but twenty-five countries in southeastern Wisconsin but due to our activties in Simplex Sales, the Precision Machine Company has seen fit to increase our territory to forty-one counties, which will greatly help us in making a still better showing.

Our success has depended greatly upon the creditable work of our small force of two men handling the entire sales and installation work for our office, Mr. Jack Stallings, and the writer, and we were recently able to employ another man, Mr. W. A. Wallingford, to handle our installation work.

While there are a great number of theatres in our territory using other makes of Projectors at the present time, that were installed previous to our opening of this office, our record of sales since we have been here show that the Simplex will eventually be installed in practically every theatre here sometime in the future.

Swaab of Philadelphia

THE accompanying photograph was taken recently when we placed in our window on exhibition the two Simplex machines purchased for the Princess Theatre at 1018 Market street, owned by The Stanley Company of America. This installation completely Simplexized Market street, this city. On this street are the following theatres, all now using Simplex machines:

Market street theatre, Ruby theatre, Capitol theatre, Victoria theatre, Princess theatre, Savoy theatre, Palace theatre, Family theatre, Stanley theatre, Regent theatre.

When the proposition to sell one machine exclusively was broached to us, we must admit that we were not enthusiastic as to the outcome, and we were not convinced when we signed an exclusive contract with The Precision Machine Company for the territory assigned to us, that we would succeed in our task, viz.: to convince the big men in the industry to throw away expensive equipment and install a comparatively new machine. They did, however, and the results obtained more than justified them for the great expense they incurred. Today Simplex machines are so firmly entrenched that no inducement, no matter how flattering, would convince their owners to change.

The largest and many of the smaller theatres in this city use Simplex and would not have any other. Projectionists generally do not anticipate trouble when they enter their booths since they have confidence in the machine. It puts the picture on the screen and keeps it there as steady as a rock. Formerly, with other machines, they were compelled to renew a gear from time to time in order to keep them steady. It is now their boast that they have never been called upon to buy a gear for the Simplex. As distributors, we have not sold a gear, although in order to play safely and from our experience with other machines, we stocked up with them, and the original order, over six years old, is still in stock to take care of accidents and emergencies. The slogan we adopted several years ago relative to the machine "Simplex Simply Satisfies" has been justified by our repeat sales.

Fourteen months ago we began the issue of a House Organ, now favorably known throughout our territory as "Swaab's Monthly Messenger," wherein we exploit the Simplex machine and supplies generally. Every new accessory or novelty is first offered to us as the recognized leaders in our line. We point with pride to the many theatres, new and old, we have equipped and our many satisfied customers.

We maintain a splendid repair shop for the repair of all makes of machines, and we have quite a number of loan heads for customers' use while their mechanisms are in the shop. In emergencies we repair machines while you wait. We are equipped for this work with tools made by the factory, and our work is right.

Once in a While Comes Something Really New

THE old time jest in which post holes were to be sold by the yard is on its way to extinction. A firm in Connecticut has turned this byplay into a commercial actuality by making for sale a variety of sizes of holes.

Although the scheme appears at first to be one for the exponent of humor, a further study of the idea impresses one in the wonder that some other firm did not think of it before.

The Stine Screw Hole Co., of Waterbury, Conn., is the manufacturer of this odd commodity, and the thoroughness with which it is attempting to merchandise its vacuous product is proof that the screw hole is here to stay. As the slogan of the campaign says, "Once a screw hole, always a screw hole."

These screw holes consist of a steel sleeve with an internal thread, the sleeve being constructed so that it may be driven into the material by means of a special driving head. On the outside of the sleeve are knurled bands which grip the material and prevent the sleeve from withdrawing. These screw holes are made for either wood or machine screws, in any of the commercial sizes.

Advantages of screw holes are many. Their use does away with all plugging of used holes; screws may be used time and again without marring the wood or plaster or loosening the grip of the screw. When constructing walls the holes may be sunk into plastic material so that attachments can be made to the finished surface without chipping or sealing.

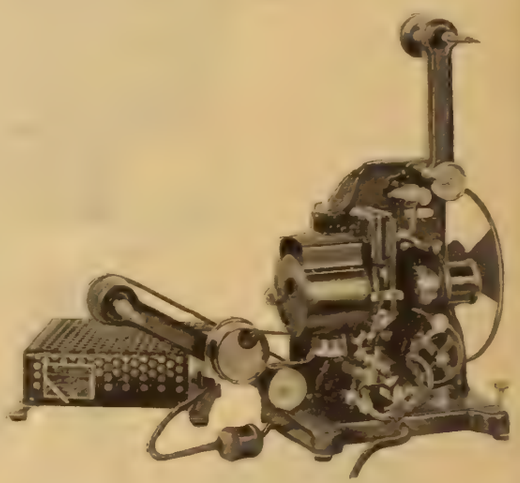
There are many uses to which screw holes may be put around theatres. For wall cases in the lobby, decorations in the auditorium, attachments to the walls or to plaster columns, are but a few of the possible applications.

The screw hole is a distinctly new article and by its very nature should command wide attention and a considerable sale.

Recent Improvements in the New Premier Pathescope

THE manufacturers announce their recent production of a wonderful new lamp of the Monoplane variety, giving greater illumination than anything heretofore known to the art and surpassed only by the electric arc.

Mr. Cook, President of the Pathescope Company of America, Inc., says it is sometimes amusing to note the expression of amazement on the faces of users, familiar only with the early type of lamps, when they see the marvelous brilliance of the screen now easily obtained with the new lamps, which can be used on the same 4-ampere rheostat furnished as standard equipment with the former Type T-4 lamp.



The new lamp furnishes about five or six times the illumination obtainable with the earlier models, and absolutely flickerless, due to the balanced shutter characteristic of the NEW PREMIER PATHESCOPE, and obtainable only with their eccentric star intermittent movement, formerly described in these columns.

The manufacturers are particularly proud of the fact that the Pathescope was the original SAFETY STANDARD projector, with nearly ten years of successful experience before any other manufacturer entered its field. The illustration shows the latest model with direct motor rewind.

List of Projection Books

Fred O. Rossman, Ponca City, Okla.:

After reading several articles in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS from operators or projectionists as they are now called, I have come to the conclusion that in any craft one can never know too much about it, and as I am a projectionist of some years experience I like to keep posted on improvements in the projection room, and having been two years over seas I have lost a lot of valuable information regarding the operation of a picture machine and am writing to you to find out the best source of getting it.

In the articles printed in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS by different projectionists they try to correct the faults but do not give the correct way of doing it which does not help the fellow who is anxious to know and buys the NEWS for that one purpose.

If you have it I would like a list of firms who publish an up-to-date book or set of books on projection, wiring and everything connected with the operation of a motion picture theatre. Would appreciate this very much.

Comment: No man in any industry no matter how small or large the industry ever grew to a point where he knew all there was to know. But this seems to be an unknown fact with many thousands of projectionists. They feel that because they are able to thread up a machine and put on a pretty good show and get their pay enevelope every Saturday night or whenever it is that they get it, these men we say feel that they know it all. Such men never rise to be Chiefs. They stay where they started. On the other hand the man who realizes that he is acquaintd with only a few of the many phases of projection is the man that is constantly learning. Hardly a week passes but that he reads or hears of something that strikes him as a good idea and a bit added to his store of knowledge.

We are glad that you brought up the subject of "constructive criticism." Often it seems that eight times out of ten when a reader tells of some trouble he has been having he fails to suggest a remedy. Perhaps in the majority of cases the remedy as proposed by the man would not work for one reason or another. This possibility of error should not cause him to hold back such suggestions for they will oftentimes give another man an idea which will solve the trouble.

We feel that we have been criticised many times for making our answers incomplete but we dared not do otherwise. The trouble lies in the inadequate information supplied us. Many more times than once we have received questions of this nature:

"There is a bad knock on the left hand side of my machine. Tell me what the trouble is."

Now how many chiefs of projection would dare to undertake to answer this man without an army of "ifs" and "maybes." in fact, to answer this vague question one could write ten thousand words and still miss out on the real trouble. If the writer would only understand that our answer is only as good as his question he will make the latter as complete as possible putting in too much data instead of not enough.

Very soon we intend to publish a complete list of books that might be in the library of every projectionist. Of course, it would not be advisable to purchase all the books but we will assume that cost is secondary and go ahead with our complete listing. Here are a few firms that can help you out. Write to them for information on the books they carry.

A Novel Shutter

M. W. York, Cherokee, Okla., says:

I haven't as yet written to the NEWS, but at that I don't feel like a stranger, for I have been a reader of the NEWS for some time.

I agree with Brother J. F. Welsh in every respect about the difference between the words Operator and Projectionist. Operator is one who doesn't care. The Projectionist is one who does care and takes an interest in his work.

I believe that the city operators (or projectionists) are more to blame for punch marks than the small town projectionists. The majority of the small town projectionists have but one machine, and what good would it do for him to put punch-marks on the film unless he likes to see the white spots show on the screen? I don't, I cut every punch mark out; if I ever miss any it's because I don't know it.

I am running a 1916 Model Motiograph projector, which has run matinee and night for six days a week (sometimes seven) for three years. It has also been through a big fire. It is now throwing as good a picture as it did the first time it was ever run. Why? It has been taken proper care of.

I am running a continuous show with the one machine, changing reels on the run. I see that some of the Projectionists are having trouble with A. C. Current; I don't. I am using A. C. Current. I have a throw of ninety feet, and a picture about 12x14, and it is as plain a picture as anybody can put on the screen with D. C. I am using a carbon set which is half way between a D C and an A C Set. I also use a freak shutter.

Here is a list of the exchanges from whom we get our pictures:

Fox, Kansas City, canceled on account of poor service.

Goldwyn, Kansas City—Good.

First National, Oklahoma City—First Class.

Exhibitor's Mutual, Oklahoma City—Good.

Triangle, Kansas City—Fair.

Fox has the poorest pictures (I mean in poor condition) of any other exchanges that I know of. Well, I had better quit and give some of your other "Bo's" a chance to say something.

Reply:

Glad to welcome you as a contributor. Come again and often.

As regards your awarding all the blame for poor condition of film to the city "operator," we don't believe you really agree with what you have said. In any fault of this nature it is difficult to place the blame, but we cannot convince ourselves that the blame lies at the projection room of any one class. No doubt a few men in each class are the guilty ones.

It used to be just as you say, that the country man had to put on pictures with one machine, but today this method of doing business is going out of style, and more and more small theatres are installing two machines. But as far as punch-marks are concerned, there is almost as much to be gained by having them in the case of the one-machine room as the multi-machine room. If the man who handles but one machine wants a good optical signal to warn him when to lay aside his cigarette and hunt up the next reel, what is there better than a couple dozen of punch-holes? This is but one suggestion. There are plenty more. All you have to do is to leave it to the lazy, indolent operator to find them out.

You are surely doing a good turn by your Motiograph. What a relief it would be to all machine manufacturers if projectionists took as good care of their machines as you have done! Some men believe that manufacturers prefer to turn out machines that will last but a short time, even with the best of care. This is not so. They realize that to gain prestige a firm must market a product that will "stand the gaff" under average conditions. In the motion picture field the trouble has been that the "average condition" has been a pretty low down condition. Men in charge of projectors expected machines to run night and day without attention, and then when due to this lack of attention some part wore out or gave way there arose a terrible cry, "Give us good machines." And all the time manufacturers were saying, "Give us operators with brains." (This was before they used the word "projectionists.")

While speaking on this subject we are reminded of a thought that comes to us quite often from projectionists who have made the trip to Broadway, and while there have seen the projection at the best theatres. These men write in this fashion:

"A few weeks ago I was in New York and visited the "So-and-So" theatre, which is supposed to be one of the best motion picture houses in the world. I expected to see some wonderful projection, but it was just ordinary. I get as good results at my theatre here in Blanktown."

Such letters as this one go to show what word of mouth advertising will do. To our knowledge the leading houses in New York are not known far and wide for their "wonderful projection," but instead for their "good, consistent screen results." It is to be doubted if many of these visitors spent any time in the projection rooms to see the methods employed. They judged everything from the screen To be sure the screen is the final court—but there is really considerable more to the whole matter.

For instance, in the letter above, the writer men-

The Motor Generator That Produces Perfect Arcs

TRANSVERTER, the first and only series arc machine, improves projection conditions as no other device will do, and is the source of great satisfaction to patrons, management and operator.

It changes alternating current to a superior direct current having four to five times the candle power.

Transverter current goes direct to the arc lamp, not through resistance that increases the current consumption and heats up the booth.

Transverter permits the most artistic projection. With it the operator can increase or decrease the amperage furnished to the arc, as desired, thus obtaining the light best adapted to the film being shown.

This adjustment is obtained by a slight turn of the control handle on panel board; the response is instant.

An ammeter shows the amperage being delivered and a voltmeter the length of arc. The Transverter operator adjusts his arc by this meter instead of by looking into a powerful arc. Furthermore, the automatic voltage regulation makes necessary less frequent arc adjustments, and even permits the operator to turn his back on the projection machine long enough to rewind and patch film.

Transverter (double arc type) provides for a perfect dissolve of the pictures, as it gives two perfect arcs of the same amperage.

tions that he gets as good results in his theatre. Perhaps, but does he have the obstacles to meet and conquer that the men in the big city houses must constantly put up with? It might be asked if the smaller cities and towns have 190 foot throws; have they an angle of projection as great as 20 degrees; and do they run all new films? Also, and not the least important, do they encounter 90 and 100 amperes to work with?

But the point we wish to emphasize was the care given to the projectors in these large houses. The men in charge have been selected because of their knowledge of the craft and the way in which they handle their machines proves that the masses of metal are considered of vital importance. If a knock or a grind develops it is not allowed to go until "later in the week, when there's more time." Instead, an investigation is made as soon as possible and the trouble corrected. What is the result? Well, there are some machines on Broadway that have been running without a murmur for over three years and perhaps longer. Good, persistent care is the reason, just as Mr. York has so well said.

The new-fangled shutter—a sort of vignetting shutter—and the unusual carbon set are shown in the illustration. May we ask what Mr. York claims for the freak shutter?

Your list of Exchanges checks up well with other lists received. Poor Fox! When will they get wise to themselves?

Electricity from Hand Generating

TO those of us who are in the habit of attending a movie theatre once a week or oftener, it may not occur that there are some hundreds of millions of human beings on this earth who never saw a moving picture.

Electricity is absolutely essential to motion picture projection. In the United States practically every hamlet and even many thousand country homes have elcctricity always on tap. Isolated electric generating plants operated by gasoline and kerosine engines solve the problem where their expense is justified and a sufficiently intelligent caretaker can be found. But the weight, size, complexity and mechanical skill required absolutely bar the motor generator equipment for many foreign countries. However, where labor is unskilled, it is always cheap and plentiful, and for such localities the hand operated electric generator illustrated herewith is meeting with a large and deserved success. A couple of husky negroes in Africa, coolies in China, mujiks in Siberia, or Hindoos in India can furnish the necessary electric juice for showing up to an 8' x 10' picture with the PEERLESS STANDARD PORTABLE PROJECTOR and direct Gear Driven Electric Generator, as illustrated.

The manufacturers, whose address appears in the Accessory Section, have shipped a large number of these outfits to China, India, the South Sea Islands, etc., and repeat orders by cable have borne eloquent testimony of the satisfaction which they have given.

Intermittent Bothers

W. H. S., Geneseo, Ill.:

I have been a reader of the News and find in it a bunch of good "stuff," in line of helps for the brother operators. I am in the game and like it above anything else I have ever done. I have operated a number of types of machines, but find the Powers gives a picture that cannot be had with any other make of machine. The half tones in projection are brilliant, the full tones are clear. I am operating 6A machines and think I am on the right track of projection. I have no question but that the N. A. M. L. is the best thing that was ever organized, on account of the poor service we get from the different exchanges. Please send me the application, together with N. A. M. L. labels.

Yes, there is one thing I wish to ask the professional projectionist. It is this: how high or how low do the intermittent bushings have to be set to insure the best possible results? I have installed a new cam and a new cross, but I think the click when film is in is louder than should be. I have a very steady flickerless picture, far better than I see when I go visiting other operating booths. I am afraid of a tendency to wear the cross like the one I took out. It was more square than round. Please give me a little advice on the bushings and a diagram if possible.

I am operating at the Wigwam theatre at Geneseo, Ill.

Reply: Your name will appear soon on the Honor Roll as a new member of the N. A. M. L.

As for the setting of the eccentric bushing on a Powers machine, this is not a matter that can be explained by a diagram.

Those experts who make the necessary adjustments do so mostly by their sense of touch, in the following manner:

The eccentric bushing, which is known as Part No. 670, has two holes on one end. These holes are for the insertion of a punch or similar tool by which the circumferential movement of the guides your patrons to safety—

THE AISLELITE

NAVIGATION these days would be quite impossible without the guidance of the Lighthouse; now, then—

Why not pilot your patrons with the same safety Uncle Sam guides his ships at sea?

The AISLELITE is your patron's lighthouse.

It throws the light directly into the aisle; directly on the floor; directly at the seat entrance—right where it's needed.

It gives sufficient light by deflection to illuminate the auditorium, permitting you to switch off all side lights and ceiling lights.

It even enables you to dispense with ushers, if desired.

It makes your theatre more comfortable and convenient. Your patrons can find their seats without annoyance to others or to themselves.

It makes your theatre safer for everybody. No danger of a fall on balcony stairs. No likelihood of a mis-step or severe seat-jolt, with the "Aislelite" burning.

It provides maximum protection against fires. The "Aislelites" are the only lights (except the "exits") that need to be turned on during the performance—and insurance underwriters will tell you that "Aislelite" wiring is the safest kind of wiring.

It draws patronage and profits because it pleases your patrons. Because it is a comfort and convenience to those whom you serve—to those whose patronage you want.

—All are reasons why YOU should install the "Aislelite" in YOUR theatre.

Insert a punch in the hole and turn upwards to tighten. The bushing should not be turned too far to the extent that every particle of "play" between pin and cam be taken up. There should at all times be a very slight "play" between these two elements. If you are getting a loud click when the machine is under load it is probable that the "play" you have allowed is a bit too much. Turn up the eccentric bushing slightly and note the results.

Low Voltage Trouble

L. P. G., No. 799, is having trouble with poor voltage regulation:

"Your card received and I wish to ask a question which is rather long to write on a card.

"The theatre I am operating in gets the current from the town power house and the light is sometimes very bad.

"I use A. C. I also use a Fort Wayne Compensarc. I have good light when the voltage is normal, but when the voltage is low the light is bad and the carbons won't burn like they should. I have been thinking of connecting a rheostat in series with the compensarc.

"Would this give me a better light without pulling on the power house very much? I have been thinking of connecting this in series but I wanted to get your advice first."

Answer: Bothered as you are with unusually poor voltage regulation, the best way out is to purchase another Compensarc and connect them in multiple. With this arrangement you will have no trouble at times of low voltage.

Placing a rheostat in series with a Compensarc would certainly not give you better results, but would make your light many times worse than it is now.

There would be a potential drop across your rheostat which would reduce the voltage applied to the primary terminals of the Compensarc. Since this is exactly opposite to your needs when your supply voltage is already low, your imagination will tell you what would happen to your light.

A word or two about the second machine you buy. Don't decide to buy another make of transformer to use in multiple with your present Compensarc. Sometimes a projectionist does this to "see how the other type works" or else on the recommendations of a salesman who ought to know better. If a projectionist is using an Economizer buy another one; if a Compensarc get another Compensarc. Two transformers of the same make and type will work well together but a mixed pair will team up like a mule and a Percheron.

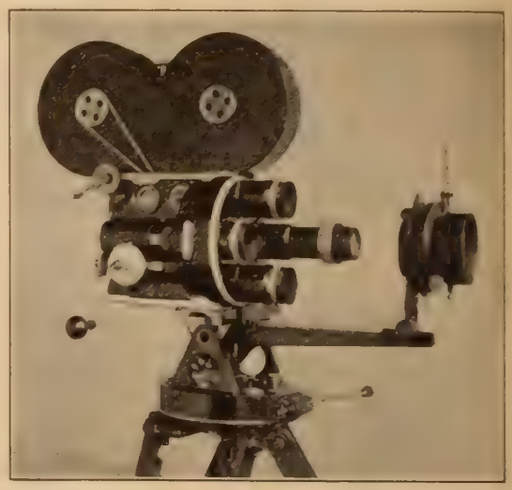
Among other valuable points not included in all professional cameras the Bell & Howell Company have put at the disposal of the operator an automatic dissolve, 170 degree shutter adjustable while running, unified magazine construction double compartment type with automatic opening valves, means for focusing on the same optical axis as the photographing lens. The camera is also equipped with a battery of lenses of various focal lengths mounted on a revolving turret plate. The angles included by these lenses are such that subjects requiring an extreme angle or close working can be negotiated as easily as the narrow angle of the long focus lens with its telephoto effects. In actual practice these angles are for the 1-5/8" focus lens approximately 35 degrees-2" lens 28 degrees-3" lens 18 degrees—and for the six-inch lens the angle included is nine degrees.

A hand dissolve attachment is supplied which facilitates quicker dissolving than with the automatic feature which ordinarily consumes four feet of film before entirely closing. With this attachments dissolves and fade-outs can be made of any duration.



B & H Camera

Aside from these features incorporated in the camera itself, is the all metal construction insuring absolute rigidity in the face of adverse weather and atmospheric conditions. The film moving mechanism is made to adhere to the established Bell & Howell Standard and operates without the use of side guide rails or friction plates, thus minimizing the trouble due to "static." Means is also provided for using the focusing microscope which gives an accurate rendering of the image right-side up as is seen by the operator instead of the inverted image rendered by the ordinary focusing magnifier.

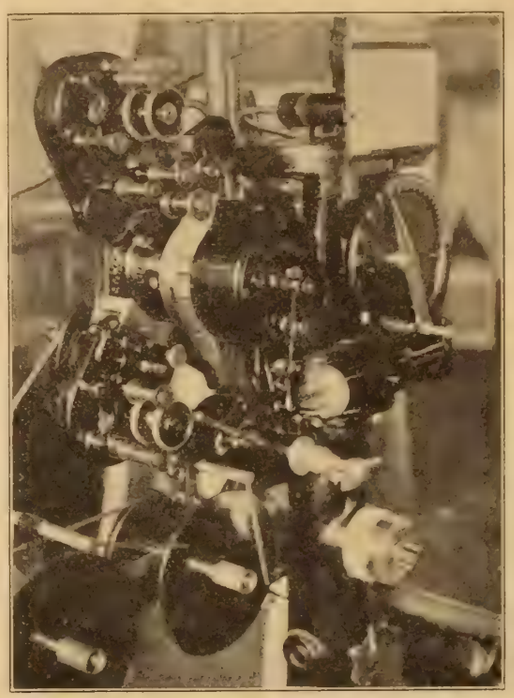
mechanical features including the standard Bell & Howell punching and registering elements that guarantee absolute continuity and alignment of the perforations. The automatic stops allow the perforating room attendant to safely handle a large number of machines without undue haste. All movements, including the horizontal shifting of the film, are actuated from the point of supply, namely, a cam shaft and cam whose periphery is grooved. Into these grooves ride the levers that transmit the desired movement to the vital parts.

The operating speed is seventeen hundred feet per hour. However, as it is safer to perforate negative stock slightly slower than this in atmospheres of low humidity, a low speed adjustment is supplied approximating eight hundred fifty feet per hour. All dust and foreign particles are removed from the film before reaching the takeup side by means of an improved suction cleaner operating on the vacuum principle and included as an integral part of the machine.

The continuous printing machine is the source of no little enthusiasm on the part of the manufacturers, and judging from the highly efficient performance of this machine they are entirely justified in their felicitations. Numerous changes have marked the passing from the experimental stage to the present degree of perfection and the amazingly low up keep and cost per foot operating expense is a strong factor in its favor. The capacity per hour is 3,500 feet; this speed of operation is attained only by the continuous printing machine and is the normal output after allowances have been made for rethreading, etc.

The outstanding feature making possible the application of the continuous instead of intermittent printing feature is the unique method of maintaining true alignment and registration of both negative and positive during exposure, although their physical properties may differ due to shrinkage and development. This is taken care of by a specially designed sprocket, the teeth of which are made to conform to the dimensions of the perforations with due consideration being made for shrinkage of negative, the exposure is made through a variable aperture during the passage of the two films over the circumference of this sprocket. During the exposure the two films are kept in contact by a constant pressure of air whose direction of flow is from the light chamber through the printing aperture and against the moving films. The light control covers a variation of twenty-two intensities, enough to cover any condition of over or under exposed negative generally encountered.



Band "H" Printer

While the actual shifting of the movable element of the exposing aperture is accomplished automatically at the change of scenes, the desired width of aperture or limitation of this movement is controlled by the position of the index hand on a control dial located on the front of the machine. This dial is graduated into twenty-two points corresponding to the twenty-two variations of light intensities obtainable, and in operation the attendant is required to make the necessary changes for scenes that vary in density. However, a radical departure from this point of operation is under consideration which will do away entirely with the necessity for constant attention on the part of the operator, in order to make the light changes for each scene.

The device in question, when applied, will make all the changes necessary in the printing light for consecutive scenes, entirely automatic and independent of the operator, and will require only an initial threading for a much greater length of negative than is now accommodated in one roll.

The splicing machine, while a comparatively new addition to the line has fulfilled an important step in the editing of the completed picture and is fast becoming an essential part of the laboratory equipment. The neatness and celerity with which its operations are characterized makes the old method of splicing by hand so expensive in comparison, that only the most obsolete establishments show any reluctance in adopting this machine. The width of splices made being about 1-32 of an inch they offer very little resistance in passing over the various sprockets of the machines. Owing to the nature of the weld its tensile strength is much greater than that obtained by hand patching.

Some Passing Thoughts on Motion Pictures — A Hope

Charles D. Isaacson

(Reprinted from the Globe and Commercial Advertiser.)

MUSIC marks the grade of motion pictures.

Once there were just motion pictures. Now there are vaudeville standard pictures and burlesque standard pictures (witness the advent of the so-called bathing girls).

Music marks the division.

In the beginning of pictures, just as in the beginning of all forms of entertainment, the shrewd showman discovered that the use of some kind of music would get the crowd. Shrill instruments attracted the people by noise, loud bands brought the public by blaring and tooting.

It was a surprised audience which heard the first piano in the movie show. I think it was the habit then to give every love scene its own version of "Hearts and Flowers," and when it came to the villian's entrance...there...was the sound...of mysterious...chords, timed somewhat...like...this! Sad, weep parts were signalized by tremulos. It was all quite crude, but nevertheless moer effective than nothing at all.

Now you can trace the development of music in the movies along the same lines as music in the drama. First of all there was incidental music (I can remember the strange book of incidental music which the theatre orchestras used for all occasions from Shakespeare to "Uncle Tom's Cabin"). The beginnings of opera were reached when music was played while the words were spoken. The persons of the day were a little bewildered at first and resented the music being played while the words were spoken. Anything but while the words were spoken. But they became accustomed to that. And then came the use of words sung to the music. And then there was music written which fitted every mood of the play all the way. Thus came grand opera and Wagnerian opera.

We haven't reached grand opera in motion pictures, although, as I remarked, we have struck that standard. We have theatres where we can hear the finest of music as a compensation for pictures not quite the finest. Where the pictures are of the best the music makes them so much better. I remember reading in some magazine recently of a picture which seemed terrible until it went into the atmosphere of one of these grand opera film houses bathed by the symphony orchestra. How many people have said: "I go down to hear the music and sometimes I see the pictures." As a musician I am glad that the growth of the pictures has been made an excuse for bringing good music to the people. As a believer in the movies, I am hopeful that some day the pictures will use music for all it is worth.

You may have wondered how the man at the piano in the theatres knows just what to play and when—that he doesn't do "Yankee Doodle" in the kitchen scene instead of the marching part, where he comes right in on time. Maybe he has figured it all out himself, and selected the music which belongs to each episode throughout the film, but the probabilities are that he has carefully followed the Music Cue Sheet sent out with the picture. This is a document carefully prepared by a film-musician, who has studied the film, timed it and fitted in the music to measure. He will instruct the musician: "At beginning play ten measures of 'Moonlight Sonata' down to title 'As the Moon Rose, A Sad Faced Man Walked Across the Plains'—play fifteen bars of 'Anitra's Dance' from title 'In the Meantime a Gay Lass Danced at Home'—and so on."

Not always do the cue men give the kind of music is have used. They must consider the type of musicians all over the country. The kind who play in the movies are not always good artists. But why? In the grand opera type of film theatres, there's no stigma attached to the musicians; in fact, it's become quite the thing to say that Miss DeLong sang for Dr. Riesenfeld at the Rialto. I can imagine a future announcement in the music magazines: "Miss Florence Benton, member of Metropolitan Opera Company, member of Rialto Theatre Music Company." For the musician I see an enlarging field of endeavor in the movie work—for soloists, orchestra people, and composers.

Instead of a sheet, what is to prevent a score for each picture that aspires to the dignity of a feature? Suppose when Geraldine Farrar is about to appear in a new picture that Charles Wakefield Cadman or Puccini or Henry Hadley were commissioned to write a score for small orchestras work) and piano transcriptions of the same? I can conceive how any of these men I have mentioned would do a masterpiece, that would live. It would be a significant idea for music. Think of the opportunities for creating themes which could be developed throughout the drama—Farrar's theme, the father's home, the lover's theme, the villian's theme—the ocean motive, the storm motive! Think of the new atmosphere in the musical end of the theatres; of the higher values it would give the picture itself.

Not worth while, are some of our musicians and film magnates thinking?

Listen to this, my honest belief:

The time is not far distant when there will be big runs of "grand opera films"—which have their musical scores written by master-musicians and interpreted by orchestras, singers, dancers, lighting effects added to the picture itself. The time is not far distant when the moving picture theatre will be the musical headquarters of the neighborhood, and through the musical environment all that is cheap and worthless will gradually disappear from the screen.

Music marks the grade of motion pictures.

An Oplex Sign Will Always Draw the Crowd

One of the publicity problems of the moving picture theatre is to reach its public quickly, to "grab them off the street." With a bill that is constantly changing, the job is to shout the offering to the crowd with maximum force both day and night.

That is why some of the most successful houses are using Oplex Signs—raised, white letters on a dark background—particularly the interchangeable Oplex Signs in which the reading can be changed in a few minutes by simply taking out one set of letters and putting in another set.

No other sign can be changed so easily, no other sign gives the same forceful day and night effect.

We shall be glad to tell you all about Oplex Signs and send you a sketch showing how your sign will look.

Save a Dollar a Day the Argus Way!

Hundreds of Exhibitors Have Done It—So Can You

You should surely be interested in any proposition that will save you a dollar a day in running expenses—$360 per year. Argus Equipment will insure such a saving and at the same time result in better projection, thereby increasing your patronage. Your principal ambition is to cut your costs and increase attendance—you can accomplish both these things by installing the

Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter for Mazda Lamp Projection

Manufacture underd Argus Patents by the General Electric Co.

Reports from hundreds of exhibitors show that Mazda Lamp Projection by means of the Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter cuts running expenses from $30 to $50 or more per month, depending on conditions. This big saving in electric current bills will soon pay for making the change, and after that the saving will be all "velvet." In addition to the actual saving in expense, Argus Equipment will give better screen illumination, eliminate flicker and eye-strain, eliminate the poisonous carbon fumes and dust, make the operator's work more pleasant and give him more time to watch the picture on the screen.
The better illumination will cause people to prefer your theatre and attend more often, which will mean additional profits for you right from the start.

Quickly Attached to Any Carbon-Arc Machine

ARGUS CRYSTAL BEAD SCREEN
(Patented)
This wonderful new screen has been installed and is highly endorsed by many exhibitors—it is the last word in screens. The Argus Screen gives added depth of focus and realism to the pictures, and eliminates "fade away" from angle projection. It may be washed with warm water without streaking. It will insure perfectly projected pictures from any seat in your theatre. Ask for quotation, giving size of your screen.

The Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter can be installed quickly and easily on any projection machine without disturbing the carbon-arc equipment. Any one can make the change by following our simple photographic instructions.

Mazda Projection may be used efficiently in the great majority of picture theatres, for longer throws and larger screens than formerly.

Decide Now to Cut Your Costs

Just drop us a line and we will figure the exact saving which should be made by using Argus Equipment in your theatre, and tell you how soon the saving will pay for the installation. Don't delay—write us now.
